THE IMPERISHABLE WORD

The International Sunday School Lesson,
By REV. E. P. BILLUPS,
Assistant Pastor West Market Street Methodist Church.

JER. 4-8, 20-24, 32

The Roll Read to the People.—We had a picture in the last lesson of the courageous work of Jeremiah in speaking God's word of reproof to king and people. Today we find that Jeremiah is "shut up" and "cannot go into the house of the Lord." But he finds a way of reaching the people. Jeremiah, having dictated a message to his scribe, Baruch, commanded him, saying, "Therefore go thou, and read in the roll, which thou hast written from my mouth, the words of the Lord in the ears of the people in the Lord's house upon the fasting day; and also thou shalt read them in the ears of all Judah that come out of their cities." The fearless prophet laid bare the sins of the people and called upon them to return to Jehovah. The proclamation of the word of God is the best call to repentance. These were God's words and they carried solemn significance. God's delight is to speak not judgments, but mercies and compassions, in love which forbears and forgives. But sometimes our sins leave God no choice and perforce He must be the Judge. He is a Judge here—yet, even here, there are relentings of God's gracious heart. "It may be the house of Judah will hear and return."

The King Hears.—Word reached the king that the roll had been read in the Temple and Jehoiakim was commanded to fetch the roll and read it before the king and princes. Jehoiakim obeyed, and as he read the prophecies relating to the terrible calamities which were about to come upon the nation the king became beside himself with anger, and snatching the scribe's knife from Jehoiakim, slashed the roll and burned it in the fire before him. Stupid and silly king! As if burning the Book would change or ameliorate the punishment that Jeremiah said would be meted out to him for his wickedness. It was as futile as the wind's words to the Moon in George MacDonald's verse: "Said the Wind to the Moon, 'I will blow you out.'"

But after all the wind's effort, the moon shone on. The doctrines of God's word were unwelcome; therefore they were not true, was the king's logic. The foolish king was against God's message because God's message was against him. He could not destroy the truth by burning the parchment upon which it was written. The prophecy was fulfilled. The accounts of the closing years of Jehoiakim are meager and uncertain, but they are assuredly years of misfortune, shame and ruin; and after dying in disgrace he was given what Jeremiah called the "burial of an ass." Modern Jehoiakims.—There are few perhaps today who manifest outwardly the irreverence that Jehoiakim did; yet there are those, who in a thousand ways, destroy the influence of God's word. The neglect of it is perhaps the most fatal way in which we can render it null and void. Another way is to paraphrase it, or parts of it in idle past. Then the Word is oftentimes rendered ineffective by teachers and writers, who, assuming the role of critic, cut to pieces its most precious truths. Then there are those who pretend to honor it, but seldom go near it. And there are others who know much about the words of the Bible, but they do not obey its precepts in their lives. And this, the apathy of individual Christians, is the Bible's worst foe. Indeed, if nominal Christians would only put into loving practice the Bible they profess to revere, then the Jehoiakims could do their worst with their penknives.

God's Word Stands Sure.—Man cannot annihilate God's word. God has exercised through all time a wonderful preservation over His Book. When the Jehoiakims slash the Jeremiahs rewrite, and add besides "many like words." Burning has always been a favorite method, but bonfires in later times have been unsuccessful as Jehoiakim's brazier. When the Bible was first printed in English, the Romish bishops played Jehoiakim's game. They bought up every copy they could find and made bonfires of them. The printers used the money to provide ten presses where there had been one, and the Bibles in the land increased fifty-fold. The critics have ridiculed it, but the Bible remains unscathed. Voltaire said: "It took the disciples a century to establish Christianity, I will destroy it in 30 years." The idea that a man could be so degraded in mind as to imagine such a thing! To the sane thinking man today the idea is both amusing and pitiful—amusing because of its stupidity and pitiful because of its tragedy! No, God's word stands sure! You can neither bury, burn, nor drown the truth! If by some catastrophe all the Bibles should be destroyed, the Bible could be reconstructed almost in toto from history and literature. The Bible is too thoroughly imbedded in history and literature, and too deeply graven on human hearts, ever to be lost. "The grass withereth, the flower fadeth; but the word of God shall stand forever."

NEGRO SHOT IN LEG BY ANOTHER AT LATTER'S HOME

Jake Lemons, a negro, was shot in the leg Monday night by Taylor Sockwell, another negro, at Sockwell's home here. Lemons is in a serious condition. The men were quarrelling at Sockwell's house, it is said, and Lemons left, returning to the house with his gun, when Sockwell reached for his shotgun and shot him. Sockwell was arrested and Lemons will be when he gets out of the hospital.

CERTIFICATE OF DISSOLUTION, State of North Carolina, Department of State.

To All to Whom These Presents May Come—Greeting:

Whereas, It appears to my satisfaction, by duly authenticated record of the proceedings for the voluntary dissolution thereof by the unanimous consent of all the stockholders, deposited in my office, that the Jack & Jill Shop, Incorporated, a corporation of this State, whose principal office is situated at Victory Theater Building, in the City of Greensboro, County of Guilford, State of North Carolina (Mary B. Strudwick being the agent therein and in charge thereof, upon whom process may be served), has complied with the requirements of Chapter 22, Consolidated Statutes, entitled "Corporations," preliminary to the issuing of this Certificate of Dissolution:

Now, Therefore, I, J. Bryan Grimes, Secretary of State of the State of North Carolina, do hereby certify that the said corporation did, on the 9th day of May, 1922, file in my office a duly executed and attested consent in writing to the dissolution of said corporation, executed by all the stockholders thereof, which said consent and the record of the proceedings aforesaid are now on file in my said office as provided by law.

In Testimony Whereof, I have hereto set my hand and affixed my official seal at Raleigh, this 9th day of May, 1922. 38-441

FARM DEMONSTRATION

Both from the standpoint of food, and as a money crop, the sweet sorghum merits more attention. When properly made, the sirup is a very wholesome article of diet, and may be used in many ways to reduce the sugar bill of the home. It may be used in cooking, baking, or in making jelly, and when so used adds a flavor which some people have reported to be richer than when refined sugar is used.

Sorghum is also good as a feed crop. The seed make fine food for either stock or poultry, and may be ground into flour for human consumption. It has a food value equal to 90 per cent. of corn, and sells commercially for about the same price. When stripped, the leaves are fine as fodder, while the straw, as silage, dry feed, for fuel, for fertilizer, or for making paper. Even the skimmings of the juice, in cooking sirup, may be successfully utilized by making into vinegar. In other words, nearly every particle of the plant may be turned either into food, or cash.

The crop is handled in about the same way as corn, only it is planted more thickly in the row. There are many so-called varieties, but only four main groups. These have been designated by Carlton E. Ball, of the United States department of agriculture into the Amber, Orange, Sumac, and Goose-neck sorghums. All of these are good for sirup when kept true to type, and when grown in a suitable climate on suitable soils.

The varieties should not be crossed for best results, as this generally results in a depression in yield of juice and quality of sirup produced. The soils also should be considered. Dark heavy soils, for instance, make a darker sirup that is harder to clarify than that from plants grown on the lighter sandy soils. Variety tests show that where the sorghum is to be grown on stiff, heavy soils, particularly if high winds occur, a variety with a strong stalk should be selected. In the higher altitudes, such as occur in the mountainous sections of the southeast, considerable risk is incurred in planting any variety except the black or red ambers. Some of these black ambers include the Early Amber and Folger's Early varieties. These mature in from 70 to 100 days. The Red Amber matures in from 80 to 100 days. Practically all of the other varieties require from 105 to 150 days for ripening.

In the Piedmont region and the northern part of the coastal plane, the Amber or Orange groups are best adapted, with the Orange giving better returns than the Amber. Some of the Orange group include Planter's Friend, McLean, Silver Drip, Silver Rind, Straight-necked Ribbon Cane, and Sourless varieties. The Goose-neck, Sumac or Honey groups may grow well in some years, but the making of a crop with these varieties is too uncertain to risk their planting each year.

Mother, if you can not go out to get a bottle of S. S. S. yourself, have somebody in your family will. Somebody, get a bottle of S. S. S. now! Let somebody's mother begin to feel better again tonight. Make your joints again supple. S. S. S. is sold at all drug stores. In two sizes. The larger size is the more economical.

Change Death Sentence To Life Imprisonment

Raleigh, May 31.—The death sentence of Wright Rouse, aged negro, convicted of murder in connection with the slaying of William Whittley, a wealthy Walstonburg farmer, Thursday was commuted to life sentence by Governor Morrison after alienists had submitted a report that the negro was mentally deficient. Mrs. Sarah Whittley, wife of the slain man and Thomas Hayes are now serving life terms in connection with the killing.

At his trial Rouse confessed that he agreed to shoot Whittley for the sum of $500 promised him by Mrs. Whittley and Hayes, but testified that when he went to slay the man he found he had already been shot to death.

At her trial last fall Mrs. Whittley entered a plea of guilty and asked the mercy of the court. Hayes was found guilty of conspiracy and was sentenced to life imprisonment.

VOTE FOR CLEM G. WRIGHT FOR THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

For a number of sessions Mr. Wright has represented Greensboro and Guilford County in the General Assembly of North Carolina, where he has served his county and his state with unwavering fidelity and conspicuous ability. He is recognized as one of the leaders in the Legislature, having played a highly important part in shaping constructive, worth-while legislation and in conserving the best interests of the people throughout the borders of the Old North State. A vote for Clem Wright is a vote for a public servant who recognizes no interests other than the best interests of the people. His training and experience, together with his intense loyalty to right-thinking governmental principles and his inflexible adherence to what he conceives to be his duty, especially qualify him for this important post. In highway legislation, in matters affecting the educational development of the state, in the sphere of public welfare and in countless other ways, Mr. Wright splendidly upholds the best traditions of Guilford County and the State of North Carolina.

"REVIVING IDEALISM"

"One of the many signs of reviving idealism" is what Woodrow Wilson terms a message sent him by the Democratic Union of Women of Manhattan, in which they affirmed belief in Democratic principles as enunciated by him. He is not wrong.

After the post-war "let-down," in which it seemed that the spirit of sacrifice would be lost, the nation is beginning to turn again to those ideals Wilson fought for. Surely he did not fight in vain. Surely the great work he did for democracy will yet bear fruit. It is unthinkable that the country is satisfied always to turn its back upon idealism for materialism, to adopt as a slogan, "Me first."

The reaction is here and it will grow in strength. Especially will the women of the country demand that their aspirations for the higher things be not crushed. To them the country looks as the leavening force in government, exerting a cleansing effect upon politics.

NEED ROUGH TREATMENT

The boldness with which the Bank of Summergeld and the Bank of Randleman were robbed shows how careless some rogues are of consequences. Those two men will be caught some time; they knew it before they robbed the banks if they had any intelligence at all. Yet they marched right in, showing their pistols in the faces of the employees of the banks, grabbing what money they could and fled.

There is nothing that would have kept those two men from work. They could have secured jobs if they had wanted them. But they disliked work, or they wanted more money all at once. There are too many such. They should be severely dealt with, so that others tempted to go and do likewise would stop and think it over.

CATTLE WEALTH

In ancient times a man's wealth was counted by his cattle. If rich he had many head. A poor man had few. They were money. Way back yonder, sad to say, when women were regarded as only females, it was the custom in some lands to buy a wife, and many cattle were asked for a handsome useful girl. People traveled around in those days. When their stock ate up a good stretch of grass land they moved on to another spot where the grass was lush.

Farmers who have a desire to get on in the world now are generally well fixed with cattle. The wise farmer does not, of course, move with the grass; he has grass all the time for livestock. But he counts cattle as wealth. They are a part of the land. Find fat cattle and you find a fat land; they enrich the land. They mean prosperity. Farming can hardly be prosperous without them. A rare thing is a "well fixed" farmer who does not believe in plenty of pure-bred stock.

BETTER AS INDUSTRIAL LEADER

Enthusiasts in Detroit have started the Ford-for-President business. The first Ford club has been organized there.

The trouble about running Ford for President is that many people do not think that he has had sufficient training for the job. His ideas are often startling and the American people like a man they can always place, a comfortable, easily understood man. They want some one who thinks along more or less accepted lines. They admire the genius, but they would rather have a conventionally molded President, one who would not always be surprising them.

Ford could do the nation more good by going ahead with his industrial plans, serving the country in that way. Running for the job, he would have to drop all that and he might not be as much a success as a candidate as he has been a business man.

Dr. Ignacio Barraquer, noted surgeon, occasionally drinks wine, it is reported. How many members of the Baraca classes would approve Barraquer's course?

MOSTLY NONSENSE

By Gee Gee Dee.

DID THE NEWBERRY cloud have a silver lining? Many persons believe that it did—literally—and they also believe that lining will react to the impairment of Republican hopes at the polls next November. The "Buy-a-Seat Movement" surely cannot attain much progress in this country, albeit Truman H. Newberry strives earnestly to sit comfortably in the United States senate. The issue has been raised and it cannot be brushed aside by ingenious explanations made by Republican spellbinders. Do the people want exclusive political rights of way conferred upon men with the largest campaign funds? Or do they wish to rebuke the expenditure of huge sums of money spent in the interest of men's candidacy for public office? These are questions to be answered by the voters, answered one way or the other, notwithstanding the fact that some designing politicians fervently wish it were possible to evade such issues.

Time after time it has been demonstrated that men adept in the sphere of politics cannot always control the issues of campaign. Take the Daugherty-Morse case, for example, and the question of Mr. Daugherty's attitude toward the prosecution of war fraud cases. The attorney-general of the United States has offered more than one explanation of his connection with the Morse case; he has also found it necessary to enter into the role of explainer upon more than one occasion in regard to the attitude of the department of justice toward war frauds. But there is no evidence that the people are satisfied with the posture of affairs in that connection. It becomes increasingly apparent that these issues will enter right lustily into the campaign. What do the voters think of such matters? Well, they will have something to say in the general elections in November, you may be sure.

Then there is the question of American participation in world affairs. The man whose pronouncements regarding international problems had a tremendously potent effect in convicting German war-makers in the eyes of the world in 1917 and 1918, the man whose declaration of world issues proved a largely determining factor in the great war—that man's work for world peace since the cessation of hostilities on the battlefields of Flanders will not prove futile. In this day of our boasted return to the ways of normalcy Woodrow Wilson's ideals of world peace continue to make a powerful appeal to the enlightened conscience of peace-loving people. Under the sinister influences of Henry Cabot Lodge's leadership the senate with its Republican majority rejected the league of nations idea, but that idea appears to be deathless. Here in 1922 it is rising to plague Republicans; it is causing them grave concern as to the outcome of the battle of ballots.

Now if Republicans could simply choose the issues, what a merry old world this would be! Nix on the Newberry stuff, they would say, in effect. Aw, fergit it, they would tell us if we should dare mention the league of nations. Apropos of Daugherty and his woes, they would have us dismiss such troublesome thoughts instantly if such were possible. Even the tariff, which in former years they have often seized upon eagerly as a delicious campaign morsel, has little attraction for Republican plain-politicians in 1922. Their record in tariff-making this year is one of which they are not proud, but the people, perversely inquisitive as usual, persist in wanting to know "How come?" These are truly days that try the hearts—and the minds and speech-making facilities—of Republicans. Some of them could write strangely gripping accounts of the heartlessness of American voters.

Tribute Is Paid To
Heroes of Late War

Paris, the fierce, effectual resistance of Joffre's men to the onslaughts of the invader, the heroic action of Briton, Belgian, Italian, Russian and other troops.

When America Came
But it was "a stalemate of locked armies" in the various theaters of war which the world witnessed at the time that America entered the fray, America clearly proclaiming the issues of the warring nations. Subsequent turning of the tide, at the cost of countless lives, was portrayed in stirring terms. The breaking of the Hindenburg line, a triumph in which North Carolinians of the valorous Thirtieth division played a prominent part, was verbally visualized; other epochal movements culminating in the defeat of Teutonic troops and the advent of peace "in the eleventh hour of the eleventh day of the eleventh month" of 1918 were recounted.

As those men kept the faith, so Americans today cannot break faith with themselves, or with the world. "As individuals our duty today lies not in asking a bonus for ourselves," Dr. Graham declared, "but in keeping aflame the torch lit by those heroic dead; as a state not by turning backward but by continuing the march of progress expressed in schools and colleges and roads; as a nation not by holding ourselves aloof and apart but by playing a nation's part in a tired and broken world; as a world by arming for the business and battles of peace and not of war."

Following the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner" the audience proceeded to Green Hill cemetery, where a brief service was held over the grave of Henry K. Burton, first Greensboro boy to give his life for his country in the great war. The American legion quartet, sang, the Pomona band played, and the exercises closed with prayer by Rev. J. Clyde Turner, D. D., pastor of the First Baptist church. Earlier in the day women of the auxiliary had placed flags upon the graves of veterans of the world struggle and the Civil war.

Mrs. A. D. Byrd
Mrs. A. D. Byrd, aged 62, died at her home on Tate street here Wednesday afternoon. Paralysis was the cause of her death. Funeral services were held at the home this afternoon, conducted by Rev. J. H. Barnhardt, D. D., and Rev. E. P. Billups, assisted by Rev. W. A. Lambeth, of High Point.
The body will be shipped to Lillington, and taken to Centre Plains church, Harnett county, for interment. Services will be held at the grave Friday afternoon. Mrs. Byrd leaves her husband and four daughters, Mrs. Mamie A. Ogburn, of Raleigh, and Misses Clara, Beatrice and Flossie Byrd, of Greensboro.

Expects Woman Governor
Maxton, May 31.—"I expect to live to see a woman governor of North Carolina and there are many who would do a better job of it than some men have," declared Joseph Daniels in his address here yesterday at the Carolina college commencement.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWS

PLEASANT GARDEN

Farmers in this community are very busy with their spring work. M. A. Siske has returned home after superintending the school at Haw River during the past season. Misses Minnie and Esther Hicks recently visited Gladys and Ethel Hearn.

R. H. Davis has moved his family into the Hanner house on Depot street. His wife's mother, Mrs. Johnson, of Spout Springs, and Mrs. Cameron, of Pine View, have been visiting them.

Mrs. J. R. Jones, who had the misfortune to fall and break her ankle the first of this week, is getting along as well as could be expected.

Miss Lula Brown was given a surprise birthday party last Friday evening. Delicious ice cream was served.

Arthur Patterson and Eva Coward, of Ramsey, visited at J. E. Jones Sunday.

Miss Ada Siske, who has been teaching during the past winter, has returned to her home here.

J. E. Thompson, of Staley, has taken charge of the roller mill. He has moved his family to Martin Burris house.

Misses Julia and Evelyn Rockfield have been visiting their sister, Mrs. Caffey, in Greensboro.

Connor Kennett, who has been in school at Raleigh, has returned home to spend his vacation.

Miss Ruth Ammen is visiting in Glenwood, S. C.

Mrs. H. T. Kirkman, who has been spending the winter in Florida with her sons, has returned to her home at Pleasant Garden.

Mrs. Rachel McIver, of Jonesboro, spent Sunday here with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Tucker.

Lee Kennett has accepted a position with the Piedmont Ice and Coal company in Greensboro.

Miss Frances Tucker is visiting friends in Mebane this week.

Dewey and William McCulloch have returned home from Raleigh, where they were in school the past season.

PROVIDENCE

Everybody is busy these days. Some are planting, some cultivating, others housing their hay crop.

Robert Julian has bought a new car and is learning to drive it.

Misses Ethel and Lala Cox are attending the closing exercises of the Ashboro high school this week.

Some of the people of this section attended the quarterly meeting at Holly Spring last Saturday and Sunday; others attended memorial services at Grays Chapel Sunday.

Last Sunday evening quite a number of the men in the community joined in a walk and captured and brought in a blockade still that was located on one of their farms, about ready for making "juice."

Miss Myrtle Cox came in from her work in Raleigh some days ago, suffering with tonsillitis, but is so much improved as to return to her work.

C. L. Crawford and wife and Byrum Fields and family were guests of W. R. Neece and family Sunday. The little child of John Garner died one day last week.

There seems to be plenty of fruit in this locality.

GUILFORD COLLEGE

Commencement exercises at Guilford will begin Saturday evening, June 3, with the annual recital of music department, continuing until June 6, when John Temple Graves, noted southern lecturer of Washington, D. C., will deliver the baccalaureate address.

The program of activities for commencement week is as follows:

Saturday, June 3—8 p. m., annual recital of music department.

Sunday, June 4—11 a. m., baccalaureate service, Rev. Weston Bruner, pastor of the Tabernacle Baptist church, Raleigh; 8 p. m., annual address before the Christian associations, Rev. H. O. Nash, rector of St. Andrews Episcopal church, Greensboro.

Monday, June 5—4 p. m., business meeting of the alumni association.

Tuesday, June 6—10 a. m., commencement, conferring of degrees, announcements, baccalaureate address.

Miss Bettie Blackburn left last Monday to attend summer school near Asheville.

M'LEANSVILLE

Harvest time is almost at hand and the wheat crop seems to be good, a condition generally gratifying, especially in view of the fact that the crop last year was not so good.

Next Sunday a sermon especially for "the old folks" will be preached at the Methodist church here by the pastor, Rev. D. R. Proffitt. The singing will be conducted by C. A. Clapp, of Greensboro. To the public a cordial invitation is extended.

Rev. D. R. Proffitt filled his regular appointment at Mount Pleasant last Sunday evening. As his text he chose First Corinthians, 12:7. For 30 minutes he spoke, commanding the earnest attention of the congregation.

Mrs. W. S. Dick returned last Saturday from St. Leo's hospital, Greensboro, where she recently underwent an operation. Her health is much improved.

Peck Davis, of Greensboro, visited his uncle, R. L. Davis, last Sunday.

GIBSONVILLE

Several people of this section attended the memorial services at Apple chapel the fourth Sunday in May.

The people are very busily engaged in setting their tobacco. A rain would be greatly appreciated. Harvest is looking very promising this year.

Many people of this community have been attending the revival services at Levon's church this week.

Chas. A. Hines, of Greensboro, delivered an address at 11 o'clock Sunday morning at the memorial service at Hines' chapel. The pastor, Rev. C. E. Gerringer, has secured F. F. Myrick, of Greensboro, as the speaker for the memorial service Sunday afternoon at 2.

At her attractive Gibsonville home Miss Maggie L. Waynick last Saturday evening was hostess at a delightful party. During the evening many interesting games were played. Cake, candy and fruits were served.

Those present were Misses Blanche Fryar, Minnie and Eva Payne, Bula and Mazie Smith, Edna Sharpe, Ora and Clara Martin, Jessie Lee Smith, Lizzie Callie, Pearl and Ola Keemley, Myrtle and Elppa Michael, Margie, Nellie and Josie Farrington, and Alma Andrews; and Lacy Andrews, George Rumley, Brown Fryar, Clyde Dewey Payne, Lester Summers, William and Walter Shaw, Haywood Montgomery, Theodore Wyrick, David Farrington, Arthur Wyrick, Clifton Montgomery, Leslie Fryar, James and William Rayles, Benton Clapp, Ernest Sharpe, Arnold Huffman, Lonnie Byrd, Betha Davidson, Jessie and Eura Brown, Hilary Wyrick, Rowland Iley, Raluis Cook, Roecoe Wagoner and Grady Loman; Mr. and Mrs. J. ## PERIWINKLE HOUSE

By OPIE READ

The Story Thus Far:

Virgil Drace, a young northerner of wealth and position, traveled south, bound on a mission of revenge for the hanging of his father and the kidnapping of a woman and her child by a band of guerrillas led by Stepho la Vitte, a Creole whom the older Drace had discharged for piracy. Virgil was joined in his adventure by Liberty Shottle, a new friend, a young man of good family but with an insatiable appetite for gambling. A girl of striking beauty, who had attracted Virgil's attention, proved to be Nadine, daughter of old Stepho la Vitte. Following a riot, during which Virgil rescued a man from hanging, the La Vittes left New Orleans; and the police warned Virgil that he and Liberty must leave the city by the Bumblebee, northwardbound. When Liberty discovered a case of wine addressed to Stepho la Vitte at Farnum's Landing, he decided that they would visit his uncle, General Bethpage, at the landing next to Farnum's.

They were hospitably entertained by the wealthy old general and his young wife, Liberty's aunt. Liberty borrowed five hundred dollars from the general, and left to build a jute factory—he said. With a hangman's rope in his canoe, Virgil explored a swamp in which stood a small house built of periwinkle shells cemented. Through its door came Nadine la Vitte.

She begged him to leave lest he lose his life, and promised that he might return the following Thursday, when Stepho and his men would be away. On his way back to Bethpage's Landing he gave a lift to three men, who overpowered him, tied him in an old cabin in which they piled dry rushes and bark, and set fire to the pile, then left him. Nadine rescued him, and conducted him on foot through the swamp to safety. The next day, Stepho told her she would marry Boyce, to whom he owed much. As Stepho slept in his chair, Nadine halted Tones, his man, who wanted to talk to him.

CHAPTER NO. VIII.

"You must make no noise. He is asleep."

"But I have come to tell him that the carpetbagger spy he goes to come back again."

"Go away, and you can come back and tell him."

"No, I stay and talk to you."

Stepho's voice called out: "Tones, come. I am here."

She did not wish to hear them talk. She looked at the Portuguese and mused as she walked away: "You do not know, you scorpion, how close you come to the stab. Your time will come, and I watch you."

On the island were two great live oaks, not far apart, and between them lay her theater. With creative fancy the one, with weariness of noise the other, youth and old age may make fruitful their solitude. Here Nadine had built a universe, peopling it with men, women and children from Paris, London, New York, and from her native town, lying crescent along the river. But now, out of life, there came one to dwarf the others, to thrill her, new to her art; and she trembled in exquisite fear; she who would have been cool and firm to stab the Portuguese.

It was a long time before Drace found a boat to set him over to the opposite shore. It was so late when he reached the Bethpage place that he did not go up to his room. The house was so quiet, the hounds themselves asleep, that he stole into the garden to pass the remainder of the night on a couch in the summer house. The air was heavy with roses breathing through the lattice; and as he straightened out, grateful for repose, this thought came to him: "Pale they call death, but to me it will ever be red. And I have looked into its red countenance, and was not afraid. I thank God that He gave me that strength . . . But what a melodrama!"

Day must be coming for dark-haired night was bleaching her tresses. Plantation bells began to ring the rising hour for toll, and stabled mules blew their loud brassy trumpets, marshaling the negro roustabouts whose duty it was to feed them.

At the breakfast table, Tyle, with mother tenderness, upbraided Drace for sleeping out for fear of arousing the house. Afterward Drace and the general strolled out under the trees.

"By the way," the general said presently, "I have an engagement to deliver an address before a teachers' meeting in Natchez, and I should much like to have you bear me company. We can leave this evening on the Black Hawk and reach there early in the morning."

"I'd like very much to go," answered Drace. "But can we get back before Thursday?"

"Easily by Wednesday morning. Anything important for Thursday?"

"Oh, no. An old fellow down at the ferry wants me to go fishing with him Thursday, and I gave him my word that I'd be on hand. Most remarkable old man, full of fun; quite a character."

"You must mean old Spence. But are you sure it is not that pretty daughter of his that attracts you? You'll have to be a little careful, my son. We may associate with men out of our social running, but not with women."

Mr. Drace has just consented to give me his company to Natchez."

The Black Hawk's band played a welcome, and the captain came down the plank to conduct the general on board. From a quiet, lazy and almost deserted landing the place leaped into the full throbs of life. Negroes and shiftless whites came from their hovels to gaze upon the magic splendor of this journeying palace, and the three-shell man stepped ashore to gather up dollars.

Dinner was a state occasion, and after it, the ball. Then their state-rooms—then morning, and Natchez. The address was to be delivered in the afternoon, and when the time came the general led him over to the hall to hear the speech, imprisoned him without ball in a corner, and there he had to sit. The address was long, academic and dull, and the sufferer mused:

"I don't see why Shottle ever called you a remarkable character."

Everybody came about the general to take his hand. Young women told him that they had never been so thrilled. Drace lied to him, too, swore him an orator.

"Let us walk off alone," said the general.

Slowly they walked at first, but after a time the old gentleman struck a brisker pace, toward the river.

"Now, my boy, as we've got through with those beaters of dust out of old carpets, we'll have some fun. Old Colonel Pemwerson wanted me to go home with him, and he has a delightful house, a gracious wife and handsome daughter, but I had to decline. I've stood about as much now as I can. We'll go down to old Tobe Mason's tavern, under the hill. Tobe is a gentle old fellow, never killed but three men. One of them shot Tobe's leg off and now he wears a peg; and I want to tell you that when he unstraps it and hops around in a fight, he's right meddlesome. At a trial in the courthouse here not long ago, the judge issued an order that all dead-weaponers must be left with the deputy sheriffs at the door—and sir, they made old Tobe take off his wooden leg."

The tavern was as tough a place as river men could make it. Built of logs, bricks, stones and clapboards, it looked like an architectural stagger, trying to climb the hill. In the main room was the bar. Herein Tobe gave his famous possum feasts and dances, when the spirit of liquor mounted high enough to swing its partner off the ground.

"Well, I'll be knocked in the head for a steer!" old Tobe cried out, stumping toward the general. "I haven't seed you since the river tuck fire. Well, well! Thinkin' about you the other day. Glad to shake your hand, Mr. Drace. Set right down."

"Tobe, I'm glad to see you," said the general. "And fetch us about two quarts of that summer-grape wine. Let me tell you about it. Drace. We have a wild grape here that gets ripe along in August. It's much larger and is not sour like the fox-grape, and its vine likes to climb about a cassafras sapling. And then you see an umbrella of grapes. Now don't say a word till you've had a good taste of it. Tobe makes himself, and he'll fetch us some that's at least twenty-five years old. Here we are."

The wine was as red as blood, cool and yet warm. Its flavor was the ripened sweetness of the spirit of autumn. It was as mellow as the scent of the apple at harvest time.

"What do you think of it, hey?"

"Uncle Howard, are you sure that this was not made by Bacchus instead of Tobe?"

"Good, my boy! Enjoying yourself?"

"Yes, I'm doing fine, general. You see, I can't express myself as well as you can. I haven't as much to draw from. You've not only book-knowledge, but experience, worth more socially than all the libraries in the world."

"You hit it off well. But what is better than it all? Moral freedom. This table here is rough, with one rheumatic leg slightly drawn; these chairs we sit in, bottomed with strips of hickory bark, would be scorned at the sheriff's sale; but sir, Mark Anthony, in his first triumph, his chariot drawn by lions, was not more regal than we are at this moment, enthroned and swayed with moral freedom. Poo-out, for as that same Anthony said: 'Scant not my cups.'—Tobe, where's that old scoundrel who used to play 'The Arkansas Traveler'?"

Tobe stumped his way over from the bar.

"You mean old Silthiers?"

"That's the man. What's become of him?"

"Nothin'. And I reckon he's playin' right now down at Cadman's joint, that ought to be wiped off the earth. Want him?"

"Need him, Tobias. Send a boy after him."

Old Silthiers, bald and winking, came with his homemade fiddle. The general greeted him warmly, introduced him to Drace; and the most comfortable chair in the house provided him, he sat down to play the famous old tune—and to realize the dialogue, improvising where his memory failed him:

Traveler: Why don't you cut 'er hair?

Squatter: Cause it ain't ripe yet.

Traveler: Why don't you mend your shoes?

Squatter: Cause I stole 'em an' you don't expect me to work on another man's property for nothin', do you?

Traveler: How far is it to the next house?

Squatter: That ain't no next house. Wind blowed it away.

Traveler: What's your name?

Squatter: Ain't got none. Had chills last fall and shuck it off.

The general roared his delight, said that he would go on the stand to swear against Sore Socrates in favor of the scoundrel's dialogue. "Tobe," he shouted, "fetch in the buck-and-wing dancers."

Tobe went to the door, yelled as if calling hogs; and in came two big negroes, a throng of idlers following them. At it they went, shaking the house, and when weariness threatened to seize them, for refreshment they drew off, and leaping, butted their heads together like goats. After a time the general gave them a dollar apiece, dismissed them—gave the fiddler five with an order to play that old tune again. Old Tobe was now lighting his evening lamps. The general called to him:

"Toby, what have you for supper?"

The old fellow closed one eye.

"What have I got?" he says. Ah, that's it. An' I tell you. I've got hoe-cake and roasted doves."

"No, you don't mean it!"

"Hoe-cake and roasted doves, I said."

"Good, by Gideon's Band. Fetch us, Tobias. And mark you, along with it all bring about a trowel full of that wild plum jelly. Hah, as old John said, 'Now comes in the sweet of the night, or something like that. Wait a moment, Tobe. Got any bear-bacon?"

"Bear-bacon?" says he. Have I? Got the middlin' of a bear I killed in a cane brake five years ago, hung up his sides and smoked 'em with green persimmon wood. 'Bear-bacon!' says he."

"All right; you broil strips of it and pin them to the breast of the doves. You are scapting your cups a little, my boy. I'm about ready for another quart."

The doves and the strips of bacon and the hoe-cake and the jelly came on, and arising, the general saluted the repast.

"Talk about quail! Quail, sir, is insipid, white, dry and tasteless compared with the dark richness of the dove. And look at this bread, made of meal and pearl. You never tasted any bacon like that, my son, fed on acorns showered down from Olympus. . . . The sweet of the night!"

They had finished the meal and were sitting back, smoking, sipping wine, when Drace noticed a sudden change in the general countenance, a tightening, a grimace; and turning about, he saw standing against the wall a strange figure—a man not tall, but broad of shoulder, his body sloping lithely down to feet expressive of sinewy restlessness. His mass of hair was like tangled flax straw, dark and yet gray. Like the bristles of a wild bear, his short mustache stuck out, and his heavy eyebrows looked like great hairy caterpillars crawling across his forehead. In his dress there was a wild touch, a barbaric aspect. Slowly he came forward.

"This is General Bethpage, hey?"

"That is my name, yes. What do you want with me?"

"What I want, hey? I come to 'police' to think them mule be mine."

"Well, go on away. I don't want any apology from you."

"No? You put pistol at me. That was in Louisiana. This is Mississippi."

An' I tell you here you haf turn' carpetbagger."

"What? If General Andrew Jackson should arise out of his grave and tell me that, do you know what I would say to him?"

"You would beg hees pardon as you will mine, heh?"

"I would say to him as I now say to you: You are an infamous liar."

Drace sprang between them and seized the man by the wrist; a dirk fell from his hand.

"Stand back, general," cried Drace. "There is not going to be a fight here. Stand back, Tobe!"

The dark-faced man looked Drace in the eye.

"Monsieur was ver' strong. But—I see him come other day."

Turning, the fellow made off.

"Now, who the devil was that?" asked Drace.

"That, my dear Drace," replied the general, "was the fellow you asked about the other day—Stepho la Vitte."

PUBLIC HEALTH

By Wm. M. Jones, M. D.

Your body cannot possibly grow strong if it does not get the right kind of food and in the right amounts. Overeating is a greater evil than under-eating. Nobody ever starves to death in America because the food necessary for life is not obtainable; there are many who starve to death that have a full stomach three times a day. But those people come to their death on account of ignorance and their palate; ignorance as to what combinations of food are necessary, and because they are stones to a palate that has been prevented. But today the average person realizes that it is absolutely necessary to have a variety of food, and many know what is meant by a variety, e. g., suppose we have a meal composed of wheat bread, corn bread, baked Irish potatoes and candied yams, with tea and coffee, and a rice pudding as a dessert. Such a meal is about as one-sided as it is possible to imagine. There are four necessary foods, proteins, carbohydrates, fats and salts. No man or beast can live, grow and work efficiently who does not have the required amount of each article. Another place where we let our palate empty our pocketbook is in pampering it by buying high-priced palatable food.

Now proteins are obtained from meat principally, but are also found in vegetables, particularly in all beans and peas, also in milk and eggs. The carbohydrates are the starchy foods like breads, potatoes, both sweet and Irish, rice, etc. The fats come from meat and milk products principally. The salts come from the vegetables, particularly the green vegetables, which are also rich in vitamins.

SKETCH OF CHARLES BRUCE OF GUILFORD

By Katherine Hoskins.

Among the many sturdy Scotch settlers of the Piedmont section of North Carolina prior to the Revolution, there were none who strove more earnestly to make a real home in their adopted country or who rendered more patriotic service than did Charles Bruce.

The early history of Bruce is shrouded in mystery. It is not certainly known whether he came directly from Scotland to North Carolina or whether he came with his family to Virginia and later removed to what is now Guilford county. However, from the traditions in his family and the fact that he could not have been more than 21 years old when he came to North Carolina, it seems quite probable that he came here after sojourning in Virginia. About the year 1760 he obtained a grant for a large tract of land in what is now Guilford county. This was the northwestern part of the county between Reedy Fork creek and Haw River and is one of the most beautiful and productive sections of this fertile region.

When Mr. Bruce came, this was very sparsely settled, but in a few years Bruce's Cross Roads, as it came to be called, grew to be one of the most important settlements in the county. Here the stagecoaches passed along the great road leading from Virginia and North to Middle and Western North Carolina and Upper South Carolina and Georgia. This was the great Indian trail north to south. It was here at "Bruce's Cross Roads" that the militia met for military drill. In 1776, during the first troubled days of the Revolution, Captain Dent was killed here; being, by some reports, the first North Carolinian to fall in the struggle. Ashe, in his History of North Carolina, speaking of the gathering of the Whigs against the Tories, says:

"In Guilford, Colonel James Martin assembled the Whigs at the 'Cross Roads,' but the Tories resolutely pressed against them. A company, of which Samuel Devinny, one of the former Regulators, was the leader, on being opposed by Captain Dent, shot him. James Lowe and Robert Adams are particularly charged with having fired the fatal shot." Bruce's home was built near the Cross Roads and this incident happened near his house.

After Mr. Bruce had established himself and built what was considered a great house, he shortly afterward married Elizabeth Benton, sister to be an aunt of the famous Senator, Thomas Hart Benton, of Missouri, who was born in Orange county, North Carolina. Very little is known of his life from this time until the outbreak of the Revolution except that he was the "Lord Bountiful" of the settlement, was one of the largest slave-holders and land-owners of Guilford county, and was highly respected by his neighbors. One of his descendants says that she remembers hearing her grandmother, in speaking of him as he was at this time, say:

"One of my first memories is of seeing a tall, fine-looking man in breeches with silver buckles, standing in front of a long mirror." In April, 1776, we find that Mr. Bruce together with Daniel Galasie of Guilford, was appointed to procure firearms for the troops.

In November, 1776, Mr. Bruce, together with Ralph Gorrell, Joseph Hines, Isham Browder, and David Caldwell, was sent as one of Guilford's deputies to the provincial congress at Halifax. Here he joined in the serious discussions concerning the provisions of our first state constitution, and was one of those who voted for this great instrument of government. He was appointed a member of the committee of accounts by this congress, and, in accordance with a resolve of the congress that the state be divided into districts and that one person from each district be appointed to represent the Continental line, he was appointed to serve as recruiting officer for Guilford county.

There are several stories told of Bruce's narrow escapes from capture during the war. His house was the center of the Revolutionary spirit and a general meeting place of the "Friends of Liberty." At his house was the first meeting of this Revolutionary society of North Carolina. Just before the Battle of Guilford, the country was filled with troops from both armies. There were several accounts concerning encounters which occurred between Light Horse Harry Lee and Tarleton's dragoons near Bruce's Cross Roads, but Capt. Wright in his "Life of David Caldwell" seems to give the fullest account of it. Colonel Harry Lee, in his "Memoirs," also tells of this encounter at Bruce's.

"During this day, the 12th, (February, 1781), a skirmish took place between the corps of Lee and Tarleton, near Bruce's Cross Roads. Mr. Bruce was in good circumstances, and lived about half a mile south of the cross roads which bears his name. Colonel Lee with 50 or 60 men, called at Bruce's about noon and set breakfast and rest. Just before the setting, Isaac Wright came riding up on a 'Red-bitter pony' with a party of about 10 men. Tarleton's dragoons a short distance off. Captain Armstrong with 30 men, was ordered to see about it and Wright was told to accompany him. After changing Wright's nag for the feet horse of the bugler away they went. The bugler followed on the pany to see that his horse was not stolen. As the enemy did not appear, the company did not go on, but Wright, followed by the bugler and two others, advanced to reconnoiter and met the enemy. Wright and the others fled, but the British rapidly gained on the 'Red-bitter pony.' When he found they were drawing near he began to cry 'quaters, quaters,' but the reply was '—m you, we'll quater you,' and with the next breath they were slashing away on him with their swords. By this time Wright and the two with him had warned the larger party which they had left behind and they were on the foe before they had quite finished with the poor boy. It was too late to save the bugler, but a sharp conflict ensued and seven of the British fell, a sacrifice of their resentment. The British, finding themselves over-matched here, began to retreat, but the Americans dared not follow them for Tarleton and his entire force was not far behind them.

The party returned and buried poor Gilles in the Bruce family graveyard.

That night a part of the British army under General O'Hara, camped on the premises and destroyed everything that could be found. They took all the provisions, grain, and forage they could find, burned all the fences and outbuildings, and were on the point of destroying the house when John and Richard Robinson, two Quakers who were great friends of Bruce, came over and persuaded them not to do it.

Mr. Bruce remained with Colonel Lee until after the battle of Guilford Courthouse which took place March 15, 1781. Although he took part in that battle it is not known the part he played or how long he remained in the army. However, from the courage he showed on other occasions we can judge that his conduct was praiseworthy and distinguished.

The next year, April, 1782, Guilford county again sent him as their representative to the legislature, this time as a member of the house of commons. By this legislature he was appointed one of the auditors of the Salisbury district under "An act to amend an act—continuing in office the district auditors of this state," and another appointing district auditors of this state for the settlement of all claims now due and unsettled.

Taugott (Traugott) Gage, James Hunter, and Charles Bruce were appointed for the upper board in the Salisbury district.

Two years later, 1784, Mr. Bruce was made the commissioner of confiscated property for the Salisbury district.

Disagreeable as was the office of commissioner of confiscated property in a section filled with former Tories on whom the act of confiscation had most effect, Mr. Bruce used such excellent judgment and good sense that the people seemed to have had little feeling of an enmity toward him. As a whole his reports throughout his term of office, which lasted until 1790, show the most careful attention to his work. In some cases, however, the reports show instances in which he sold unlawfully, confiscated property and made mistakes in the amounts sold. This can be accounted for by the large extent of the district and the difficulty of personally attending to the details. In all cases where mistakes were made he invariably made every effort to repair the errors and see that justice was done.

So carefully did Mr. Bruce perform the duties as district auditor the commissioner of confiscated property and so many evidences of good judgment did he show that in 1790 the legislature made him a member of the council of state which served with Governor Alexander Martin. Very little of importance occurred during the year he served as councillor, the only thing of general interest being the tour made by President Washington through North Carolina and other southern states to Savannah, Ga. In his great cream colored chariot, Washington passed through Halifax, Tarboro, Newbern and Wilmington on his way south meeting everywhere great crowds of people to do him honor. On his return trip he passed through Charlotte, Salisbury, and Salem, where he spent a day and two nights. Leaving Salem, June, 1791, General Washington again took up his journey, stopping a day and night at Guilford Courthouse with Governor Martin, and thence on north via the home of Charles Bruce, (Bruce's Cross Roads). An old man in the neighborhood remembers hearing his grandfather say that he saw the great coach and magnificent horses drawn up in the shade of the large oaks standing in front of the house. Bruce was councillor of state at that time.

After Mr. Bruce served as councillor of state he seems to have settled down on his plantation with his family and slaves and thereafter paid little attention to outside affairs. He was a surveyor, was learned in law, and was a mathematician of note. His handwriting was elegant and he was an educated man, said to be a graduate of the University of Edinburgh.

Mr. Bruce served as justice of the peace for many years; serving before the Revolution and until 1786. He was also postmaster for more than 10 years, resigning about 1830. It is interesting to note in this connection that the Post Town of Cross Roads was one of the three first colonial postoffices in the county, the other two being Center and Jamestown.

He served as member of county court for many years. He was a member of the boundary commission in 1785 when Rockingham was cut off from Guilford. Bruce was on the commission to build the courthouse and jail at Greensboro, 1808; was commissioner to standardize the weights and measures.

Very little is known about the last years of his life except that his wife died in 1799. Several years later, 1832, Mr. Bruce died at the great age of nearly a hundred years. His exact age and that of his wife and children cannot be ascertained, as the house and family records and family Bible were burned. With these records probably was lost the very romantic and dramatic early history of the family.

One of his sons, George, served in the army during the Revolutionary war, and was in the senate from Guilford county in 1782 and again in 1802. He also served three times in the house of commons, 1798, 1799, and 1801. He married a cousin, Elizabeth Benton, daughter of Colonel Lemuel Benton, of the Cheraw district, S. C. He finally settled in Darlington, South Carolina, where he met a tragic death by being thrown from a horse. He left one son, John Benton Bruce, who moved to Alabama. Young Charles settled in Darlington district, where he married Lorena Abernethy, daughter of Giles Abernethy and Elizabeth Young, of Wake county, North Carolina. He died at the advanced age of 97, leaving two sons, Charles A., and George H., and two daughters, Sarah and Betsey.

Abner married Frances McKerrall and died at Hillsboro, North Carolina. Their children were John, Charles, Georgia, Samuel Childs, Alfred, Wilson Childs and James.

Alfred moved to Tennessee and settled there. Felix Milton moved to Kansas or Arkansas.

Prof. Jerome Dowd and Hon. Willis Dowd, of Charlotte, are grandsons of Abner Bruce, the former being professor of sociology in the University of Oklahoma, the latter was an eminent lawyer of New York city, now deceased.

The plantation soon passed from younger Charles' hands to James and Valentine Allen. They, however, in 1843, conveyed it to Joseph Hoskins, whose son, Joseph A. Hoskins, now owns and occupies it. Charles Bruce, his wife, and many of his family lie buried in the neglected old family graveyard, hand-by-the-main street of Summerfield. The unmarked grave of the little bugler boy, Gilles, is here. The name of the village and postoffice was changed to Summerfield in 1819, and only the township now bears the name of Bruce.

About the year 1819, Rev. John Summerfield came through the south preaching powerful sermons and calling thousands to repentance. He held a great meeting here preaching under the canopy of heaven. The postoffice was changed to Summerfield in his honor.

This place was of some importance in the early days. Here crossed two stage lines, one the great artery of travel north to south, prior to the building of the North Carolina railroad, the other the stage line Greensboro to Madison, Martinsville, Va., and Patrick courthouse. The building of the North Carolina railway changed the current of travel and the old stage coaches ceased their weary trips. Now we have the great National highway going north to Roanoke and on to Washington, via the Valley of Virginia, the Southern railway's line to Mount Airy passes here, and new life is infused into the little old village.

After much research the family records of Charles Bruce, in his own handwriting, have been found. "Charles Bruce and Betsy Bruce, his wife, were married the 27th day of October in the year of Christ 1768."

Charles Bruce and Betsy Bruce, his wife, arrived at Summerfield, (Bruce's Cross Roads), where they came to reside the 18th day of March in the year of Christ 1769. (Other family records are omitted).

Tradition has it that the family were political exiles from Scotland, being adherents of the Stuarts. It is certain that the family brought their great antipathy to the house of Hanover with them. He was an uncompromising enemy of King George.

The home of Bruce was made historic by reason of the fact that it was occupied by Light Horse Harry Lee one day and the very next night part of the army of Lord Cornwallis and Colonel Tarleton, on Green's famous retreat from South Carolina to the Dan.

Charles A. Bruce, who died at Camden, S. C., Sept. 16, 1916, stated, to use his own words, "My grandfather, Charles Bruce and his brother, George, came from High street, Edinburgh, Scotland when quite young to America. Charles settled in Guilford county. Nothing is known further of these George."

The surname Bruce has entirely disappeared from Guilford county. Charles Bruce, however, has descendants here, representatives of the following families, Tatum, Vanstorty, Hoskins, Thorpe, Allred.

Negro Carved Up In Row About His Wife

Milton Collier, a negro, carved another, Arthur Gattay, at the latter's home on Oak street here Monday night, the row starting because Gattay remonstrated with Collier about his wife. It is said that Collier was preparing to take Gattay's wife away from him.

Gattay was seriously injured with several deep and bad wounds around his face and chest. The woman was jailed when Collier was. It is alleged that she shouted to let the cutting go on, that she was tired of her husband.

STATE HAS HIGH BIRTH RATE, LOW DEATH RATE

Raleigh, May 31.—Advance figures from the North Carolina bureau of vital statistics compiled by F. M. Register, preliminary to the issuance of the general report, show that during 1921 births in the state exceeded deaths by 59,000.

During the year there were 87,000 babies born in North Carolina, while there were only 28,000 deaths. This gives North Carolina a birth rate of 33.4 per cent. for the past year and a death rate of 11.6 per cent., the former being among the highest in the United States and the latter one of the lowest.

GREAT BRITAIN WILL NOT TOLERATE IRISH REPUBLIC

London, May 31.—Secretary Churchill in the course of the debate following his statement on the Irish situation, reiterated that Great Britain would not tolerate the establishment of a republic in Ireland. He said the British troops remaining in Dublin were militarily secure and were awaiting eventualities.

"In the event a republic is set up," added the colonial secretary, "it is the intention of the British government to hold Dublin as one of the preliminary and essential steps of military operations."

VOTE FOR SPRUILL FOR SOLICITOR

To the Democratic Voters of Guilford, Stokes and Davidson Counties:

We, the undersigned citizens of Davidson County, do hereby present to the Voters of the Twelfth Judicial District, Mr. J. F. Spruill, candidate for Solicitor. True to the principles of our Democratic party, we believe that this campaign for Solicitor should be based solely upon two issues—the character and ability of the candidates. Mr. Spruill, who was born of a long line of the purest Democrats, embodies the very highest type of manhood—absolutely clean, straightforward and fearless in the performance of his duties. We have known him since he began the practice of his profession, twelve years ago, and we can testify that his record is without blemish. In the state, the county, the community, the church, he has always been a leader in every movement for good. Alert, energetic, conscientious in all things, he has made an excellent record in handling criminal cases. He was Solicitor of Recorder's Court of Lexington for four years, and the records show that he has appeared in practically every important criminal case tried in Davidson County for the past eight years.

We are confident that nowhere in the district could be found a candidate of stronger character—a lawyer of more marked ability. North Carolina Democracy must elect men of Spruill's type for the important offices.

Can You Buy a Ticket To Prosperity Station?

Answer the question for yourself. Certain qualities are essential if you would attain Prosperity. You need not only money but also the determination to conserve such resources. Did you ever hear of the millionaire who undertook to spend a fortune in one night? Some folks called him "a good fellow;" others sapiently declared he was a fool. He did not possess the elements from which success is carved. Anyone can spend money freely if he has it, but it takes real character to save money.

If you want to get a ticket to Prosperity Station, we can assist you very materially. We have evolved systematic methods of helping you to save so that you can really and truly become prosperous. The quarterly compounding of the interest on your savings deposits here is one of those ways. We can tell you how people of moderate means have utilized the resources of this bank to "get ahead." Come in, the very next opportunity you have, and we'll help you travel the highway that leads to Prosperity.
