

STRIKE END LOOMS NEAR

Strikers Ready To Consider Terms

RETURNING TO WORK

Mr. Jewell Ready To Confer With Anybody Authorized By Railroads To Bring Proposals. Includes Labor Board

Chicago, July 5.—Hope for the speedy settlement of the country-wide strike of the railway shopmen was seen tonight in statements issued by Ben W. Hooper, chairman of the United States Railroad Labor board, and B. M. Jewell, leader of the shops crafts, who ordered the walkout.

In reply to a letter from Mr. Hooper, which was regarded as conciliatory, Mr. Jewell declared that the strikers were willing to "consider any negotiations with any one in authority for settlement of the strike."

"We are willing to confer with anybody authorized by the railroads to bring peace proposals to us," said Mr. Jewell. "I include or exclude nobody, but if the labor board, for instance, came to us with a definite proposition, we would not hesitate to consider it."

In railroad circles it was declared that the way already had been cleared for a full settlement on the gravest issue—that of contract work—by the agreement of 12 roads to abolish outside contracting, at the labor board meeting last Friday, when Mr. Jewell ignored an order to appear and explain his strike order.

The first explanation of the incident was made by Mr. Jewell tonight when he said that to have appeared before the labor board Friday "would have resulted in a mob-like suspension of work by the shopmen and possible bloodshed." He said that the strike order already having gone out and a suspension of work Saturday morning at 10 o'clock having been sanctioned by locals in all parts of the country, to have made an eleventh hour attempt to avert a walkout would have resulted only in chaos.

Mr. Hooper in his letter to Mr. Jewell early in the day denied the latter's charge that the labor board was unfriendly to the employees or that it had "outlawed" the strikers. "It has only accepted your own statement that the striking men are not the employees of the carriers," the letter said. "It has not, however, used the rasping word 'outlaw' at any time."

The letter adds: "I am yet hopeful that your organization will recover its equilibrium and discern that it is better to go along with the railroad labor board, patiently when it makes mistakes, but confidently at all times that it profoundly desires to do justice to the men, the roads and the public without fear, favor or affection."

Striking railway shopmen who walked out in answer to the nationwide call from the headquarters of the six shop crafts unions here last Saturday, were reported drifting back to work today in groups of uncertain numbers.

Today was considered the turning point in the strike of the 350,000 to 400,000 workers. Although resounding generally to the call last Saturday, railroad officials insisted that many of the defections were due to the desire of men to take a holiday over the Fourth of July.

Local union reports to the office of B. M. Jewell, head of the shops men, reiterated the union assertion that the strike was effective at all points reported.

Maintenance of way men, despite the decision of that union's executive council here last night to postpone strike action for the present, were also reported to be joining the walkout. Such reports reached President Jewell's headquarters, and were confirmed by news dispatches.

Suggest Pomerene As a Presidential Candidate

Washington, July 5.—The first open reference in the senate to the possibility of Senator Pomerene, of Ohio, being the Democratic presidential candidate in 1924, was made today in the course of tariff debate. It came after Senator Shortridge, Republican, California, had predicted that Warren G. Harding, "a son of Ohio," the mother of Presidents, "would continue in the White House for many years to come."

Senator Ashurst, Democrat, Arizona, replied that although Senator Shortridge was right as to "a son of Ohio" occupying the presidency for a long time, he had made a mistake in the name, and pointed to Senator Pomerene.

TO CONCRETE KIVETT ROAD

GIVE MONEY TO FAIRS

Work To Begin As Soon As Stone Can Be Secured—Pleasant Garden Road Under Construction

At a joint meeting of the county commissioners and the county highway commission Monday afternoon the construction of three miles of concrete road 16 feet wide, on what is known as the Kivett road, from High Point to Jamestown township, and the construction of two miles of water-bound macadam from the state highway, between Greensboro and Gibsonville through Whitsett, was approved.

Commissioner W. C. Jones moved that the work on the Kivett road be started at once. W. C. Boren stated, however, that work cannot be started at once, as the highway commissioners are unable to secure the required stone. Due to the large amount of paving work being done in the cities and towns, there is a serious shortage of rock in North Carolina. Mr. Boren stated that if it had not been for the quarry owned and operated by the county no roads could have been built in Guilford this year.

The meeting also considered the matter of the Pleasant Garden road. A petition signed by many residents of the Pleasant Garden community was presented asking that the road be constructed on the present site. No action was taken, as the commission wishes to learn what route the state highway commission favors, as to the Greensboro-Randeman road.

At the meeting of the county commissioners Monday a petition was presented asking that a road be built from Greensboro to Liberty Hill. This was taken under consideration, no action being taken.

The commissioners voted in favor of giving $50 to each of the six community fairs to be held in the county.

C. M. Webster, operator of a pool room at White Oak, asked for a hearing in regard to the board's recent refusal to grant license for the ensuing year. He will be given an opportunity to appear before the board July 18.

An executive session was held Monday afternoon to discuss the matter of an underpass on the Southern road between Greensboro and Gibsonville. No definite action was taken.

Following the afternoon session the commissioners adjourned until June 10, when the matter of equalization of taxes will be considered.

George Walker Drowns In High Point Reservoir

Young Walker, accompanied by a number of his friends, entered the reservoir for a swim. He secured a plank and upon it swam to the center of the body of water, which is at various places, 12 feet deep. After reaching the center he discarded the plank and attempted to swim unaided to the bank. Before his comrades realized what had happened he had disappeared to the bottom of the pool.

CAP EXPLODES KILLING MAN

Fred Burgess Fatally Injured Tuesday

MAN THROWN 7 FEET

Was Testing Dynamite Caps On State Highway Between Greensboro and Gibsonville—Superintendent of Forces

Fred Burgess, of Pittsburgh, Pa., a young man of about 25 years of age, employed as superintendent of the Nello Teer Construction company's road force, now working on the state highway between Greensboro and Gibsonville, was fatally injured Tuesday when a percussion cap exploded while being tested.

Burgess was taken to St. Leo's hospital, this city, where he died about 4:30 o'clock without regaining consciousness.

Two negroes, Clarence Dowell, of Tennessee, and Thomas Williams, of Caswell county, were painfully but not seriously injured. They were taken to Dr. Brockton Lyon's office for first aid and then removed to St. Leo's hospital.

Walter Clark, of Knoxville, Tenn., escaped injury, but was thrown seven feet into the air. According to Mr. Clark, Mr. Burgess, with the negroes, was testing some dynamite caps on the west side of Rock Creek in preparation for grading to be done Wednesday morning by the larger crew of workers.

Clark stated that Burgess was testing the caps with a flash light. The test is made by attaching the batteries to the cap and if the bulb burned the cap was good, if it was not good no light would appear.

They were working on the last batch when the explosion occurred. Mr. Clark says he was directly over the cap and attributes that reason to his escape, because the combustion sent him sailing into the air, while the others were hit by flying rock.

Mr. Teer, head of the company, stated that Burgess had been working for the company for the past two years and that he considered him one of his most valuable men.

The body was shipped to his father, who lives on a farm near Pittsburgh.

The final attack by the free state troops commenced at midday after a lull during which the firing slackened greatly.

CELEBRATE AT BATTLEGROUND

Maj. McLendon Is Speaker of the Day

ICES AND DINNER

Major Says American Legion Is Wrong In Emphasizing the Bonus—Should Think of Service To Country

Notwithstanding the threatening weather, the celebration at the Battleground July 4 was attended by approximately 700 people. The features of the day were an address by Maj. L. P. McLendon, of Durham, athletic events and a picnic dinner.

At 11:30 the crowd assembled in the pavilion on the Battleground, and Andrew Joyner, Jr., of the local post of the American legion, presented Senator A. M. Scales, who in turn introduced Major McLendon. For three-quarters of an hour Major McLendon forcefully laid before his audience the different stages of the progress and upbuilding of America and American patriotism.

"Every American should thank God that those British soldiers did come because that fact made possible the America of today and inspired the firing of the intense patriotism of our forefathers," said Major McLendon. He stated that the American nation was not born at Guilford, Bunker Hill or Yorktown, nor at the signing of the Declaration of Independence or the forming of the constitution. It was formed, he said, by the men who stood for the constitution in the face of criticism even of men who had suffered with Washington at Valley Forge.

Major McLendon said: "We are here to determine whether this patriotism shown by our forefathers and by our army in France shall be lasting to be passed on to our children." He stated that if there ever was a time when North Carolinians and other citizens of the United States should rededicate themselves to America, "it should be done on this day. If for no other reason we should review the experiences of the past eight years. Before the war we thought we were secure, thought we had nothing to do with the other nations, then we were confronted with the necessity of fighting to protect ourselves. Then indeed we found out that a nation cannot live to itself."

"I say to you ex-service men," the speaker continued, "there is no man better fitted to serve your country in peace than you who served her in war. It is wrong that the American Legion has placed emphasis on the soldiers' bonus rather than on service. I think of the ex-service man as the stabilizing influence in our country, and the people will look to the legion to be the rear guard of American patriotism."

Athletic events occupied a part of the morning and afternoon program. There were races for both young and old with prizes of candy for the ladies and baseball equipment for the boys. A part of the grounds was given over to pitching horseshoes and many tried their skill. The formal guard mount to have been staged by the local company of the National Guard was called off on account of rain.

The crowds, which included many people from over the county, and Legion officials, were well pleased with the success of the celebration. The celebration was staged under the auspices of the Henry K. Burton post of the American Legion, of which J. F. Stevens is post commander.

Music for the occasion was furnished by the Oak Ridge band, which was led by Prof. Zach Whitaker and composed of students and members of Camp Carolina at Oak Ridge Institute. The music proved one of most enjoyable features of the day.

AN EVERLASTING KINGDOM

The International Sunday School Lesson,
By REV. E. P. BILLUPS,
Assistant Pastor West Market Street Methodist Church.

David 2, 36-45, 47

Facing a Hard Task.—In our lesson today we are introduced to one of the most picturesque characters of the Old Testament—the prophet Daniel. The King of Babylon, Nebuchadnezzar, had a dream which immediately vanished upon awakening. The king called all his astrologers, the wise men of his realm, among whom was young Daniel, and asked that they recall and interpret his dream. The astrologers were baffled and hence were not able to interpret the dream. Therewith the king decreed that they should die. But Daniel made the request that they be granted more time to consider, and the request being granted, Daniel and his three friends, Shadrach, Meshack and Abed-nego had a little prayer meeting. With reference to this incident there are two things well worth remembering; first, the answer or interpretation to the dream was given through importunate prayer; secondly, the interpretation left Daniel humble. Such was the attitude of Daniel that the proud and haughty king of the most glorious empire of the then known world was ready to acknowledge, "Of truth it is, that your God of Gods, and a Lord of Kings, and a revealer of secrets, seeing thou couldst reveal this secret." Daniel's simple faith and humility is a pattern for us—for what have we that we have not received, what treasures of the mind, what endowments of the soul? We can ill afford to be boastful of any of our attainments, for it is God who endows with those good qualities of the soul.

The Dream Interpreted.—"This is the dream; and we will tell the interpretation thereof before the king." "Thou, O king, art king of kings." Daniel was not attempting flattery; what follows refutes that idea. Nebuchadnezzar was then the sovereign of the flourishing Babylonian empire, and many lesser kingdoms. Even so, there came a Kingdom coming, as a stone cut out of the mountains without hands, which shall break in pieces the kingdom represented by the image of iron, and brass, and clay, and silver, and gold. "The God of heaven shall set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed, nor shall the sovereignty thereof be left to another people; but it shall break in pieces and consume all these pieces, and it shall stand forever."

The Kingdom.—We of the twentieth century are very little concerned about the dream of this ancient king, particularly with reference to the kingdoms which were, or are concerned. Certainly in the interpretation Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome are meant; that is four kingdoms, and there may be added without doing violence to the interpretation several other kingdoms, the most prominent of which is that of William Hohenzollern; and it does not preclude Great Britain and America, should these nations of the "far-flung battle line" fail to remember the Lord God of hosts. God showed to Daniel the pageant of the nations that should arise and fall in the earth and come to the final consummation of government in the ideals of the kingdom of Christ. God's kingdom is the kingdom of the heart and the realm of affections. It is a kingdom more stable than clay, stronger than iron, more useful than brass, more precious than silver and purer than the most fine gold. It is a vital brotherhood, knit together by the bonds of love, inviting and uniting men to service of humanity. This kingdom does not spurn government, but strives to unite all governments under the leadership of Christ to the end of bringing righteousness, peace, and good will to all mankind. This is the kingdom that shall stand forever.

Is the World Growing Better?—There arise questions from many sources as the permanency of this kingdom. Will this kingdom stand? Is the world growing better? These are some of the questions that are being asked today, and in all fairness they cannot be ignored. The crime waves, the breaking down of the morale in many communities, the unrest in the industrial world, lead many to a conscientious belief that the world is going to smash. But those who incline to this view see only today with its troublous conditions; they do not make a comparative study of history. In the study of the history of mankind, we can only regard it as a beginning. Looking at the conditions of the past and comparing with them the present, we see that there is great improvement along many lines. There is much in the new that we do not like, but in the collapse of the old, the glorious new is becoming victorious. What of the ethical ideas of today as compared to a few centuries ago? What of liberty? The ancient kingdoms in all their glory were dotted with slaves; today the idea is intolerable. Our forefathers burned witches at the stake, and thought it was to the glory of God, when they themselves came from England to keep from being burned as heretics. We have not yet the true spirit of Christian toleration, but have we not advanced quite a bit during the last three centuries? And what of the work of the church? The central thought of Christianity is Christ himself—and the kingdom of God is being understood as the rule of the spirit in the hearts of men, a Christianized Brotherhood. We have shifted the emphasis from doctrine, without minimizing its importance, to service and love. The church is making rapid strides at home and abroad. Last year in one denomination five thousand young people volunteered for life service. And what of the other work of the church? The church today calls for millions where yesterday she called for thousands. No! The world is not growing worse; it is growing better, for God is in the world. "I hold not with the pessimist that all things are ill, nor with the optimist, that all things are well," says Browning; "all things are not ill and all things are not well, but all things must be well, because this is God's world."

FARM DEMONSTRATION

Relation To Varieties

All varieties of watermelons tested have proved to be subject to stem-rot. There is no reliable evidence to indicate that the varieties now in cultivation have deteriorated or that those formerly grown were less liable to this disease. The breeding of resistant varieties is not one of the measures indicated for its control.

Watermelon fruits are subject to stem-rot at all stages of development. Green fruits, if infected, will decay as quickly as ripe fruit.

Relation To Chemical Injury
Before the nature of the stem-rot was understood, the losses were charged to the presence of lime, salt, and fertilizer residues on the walls of the cans. Extended experiments have now shown that injuries from such substances are not common and that the effect produced by chemicals can be distinguished readily. It is confined, in the first place, to melons that have been in contact with car walls or floors, and, in the second place, to the sides of melons that are abraded; or, in the places where the fertilizer residues are wet, there may be shallow, brown depressions in the rind, which do not decay until fungi have gained entrance.

Chemical injury has been found to cause a very small fraction of the losses among watermelons at terminal markets. It can be avoided by cleaning the cars thoroughly before loading them with watermelons and by the use of strong paper for lining.

Control Measures
The prevention of stem-rot is to be accomplished by keeping the spores of the casual fungus from entering the cut stem. Two lines of action are advisable: (1) Field sanitation to reduce danger of infection, and (2) stem-end treatment with a disinfectant.

Clean up the fields.—It has been shown that dead vegetation of nearly all kinds is likely to harbor the stem-end fungus. The first step, therefore, is to clean and burn the weeds and rubbish in the fence rows and along ditch banks. This should be done in the winter. Deep plowing to turn the vegetation in the field so far under the ground that it will not be exposed by next year's cultivation, also should be helpful. Both these measures are in any case demanded by good farm practice, particularly in the boll-weevil districts.

Gather and destroy all cull melons.—During the growing period the fields should be gone over once a week and all imperfect or cull melons, blossom-end rots, etc., carried out, because if left in the field they will infect the crop. Probably the most practicable method of disposing of these culls is to feed them to the hogs, since stable manure should not be used in any case on melon fields on account of wilt. The carts used for hauling should be washed subsequently with a two per cent. solution of bluestone.

Spray for anthracnose.—The methods advised for anthracnose control will be helpful against stem-end rot, as the fungus which causes the latter disease does not attack a healthy melon vine, but will grow on leaves and stems killed by anthracnose and thence be carried to the melons.

Pastors Elect Officers

High Point, July 4.—The Pastors' Summer conference of the Methodist Protestant church, held at the Children's home, this city, elected the following officers to carry on the work of the conference: President, Rev. J. E. Pritchard, of Henderson; vice-president, Rev. C. L. Whitaker, D. D., of Lexington; second vice-president, Rev. E. G. Lowdermilk, of Brown Summit; secretary, Rev. R. C. Stubbs, of Greensboro; treasurer, Rev. R. A. Hunter, Winston-Salem.

Should Ask Authorities

While the careful housewife usually labels her jellies, jams, canned fruits, and vegetables for her own later information, the United States Department of Agriculture suggests that if she intends to sell any of her products she should consult the state food authorities as to the regulations concerning weight or measure and ingredients and the proper labels to be used.

HOME DEMONSTRATION

Canning In Glass

Glass jars are more economical for home canning than tin cans, as they can be used over and over again and the cost be spread over several years.

The kind of jars.—Select, if possible, a good jar of clear white glass. Fruit or vegetables show to great advantage crystal clear glasses.

The square or round jar is used as an exhibit jar.

If clear glass cannot be had, green glass may be used, but the appearance of the canned product is much injured.

Sterilization can be effected in one as well as the other, and the green jars serve exceedingly well for home use.

A good spring top or a metal top, with which a hand sealer is used, is preferable, though the Mason top will serve for one year. After that time it is advisable to fit old Mason jars with new tops.

Rubbers.—The various types of jars are fitted with rubber rings on which the top rests when in place. Rings are used in keeping them airtight. After the contents of the jars have been sterilized it is necessary that the jar be kept airtight in order that whatever is enclosed may remain free from the action of bacteria. Do not use rubbers a second time. In buying rubbers, as in buying jars, get a good grade. Test the rubber for elasticity by stretching and folding. If it shows signs of cracking it is a poor product.

To sterilize jars.—To sterilize glass jars, place them in the canner in tepid water. Do not fill the canner with more than three inches of water. Bring the water to a boil and steam jars at least eight minutes.

No glass jars should be placed in a canner that does not have an extra bottom or basket to keep them from touching the true bottom of the canner. If this happens jars will break. A piece of half-inch mesh galvanized wire netting will answer the purpose.

Rubbers should be sterilized by placing in a bowl of boiling water and allowing them to remain for three minutes.

Packing or filling the jars.—Remove the jars from the sterilizer, prepare the fruits or vegetables, and pack them in the jars in symmetrical layers, using a thin paddle or spoon to push into place and to remove air bubbles. Pack right in to the neck of the jars, filling with water, brine, or syrup, as the packing proceeds. Wipe clean the rubber of the jar and place the rubber thereon. Push spring down lightly and place jar in the canner, holding tepid water. Never place a cold or even cool jar in boiling water or you will have breakage.

United States treasury officials announce a reduction of $1,014,000,000 in the public debt during the fiscal year which ended June 3, but many observers doubtless have their own private opinion of the reduction in the public debt.

RATHER GENERAL DISREGARD OF AUTHORITY

In both the railroad strike and the coal strike there appears to have been rather a general disregard of orders issued by the United States Labor board. Some time ago the board summoned the coal operators and miners to Washington for a conference, but the operators failed to appear, thereby flatly defying the board, which had been vested with broad authority to act in such matters. Since that time the coal operators have recognized the wisdom of obeying the government's orders, as evidenced by their attendance at the conference called by President Harding and which began last Saturday. That conference was called shortly after the Herrin massacres, the affairs in which striking miners shot down a number of men in cold blood. Had it not been for those indescribably brutal murders it is improbable that such a conference would have been called. Certainly to date no visible progress toward settlement of the coal strike has been made.

Last week the Labor board ordered railroad executives and railway union leaders to appear for a conference in the national capital, but B. M. Jewell, head of the railway unions, and other union officials refused to appear for an official investigation by the board. Again the authority of the board was flouted. Now union leaders charge that in defiance of the board's rulings railroad executives have been letting out repair work to outside contractors. On every hand there is evidence of wilful disregard of the board's orders. Under such conditions the board's rather feeble efforts to effect settlement of the two strikes naturally are not accompanied by encouraging results.

Such tactics should not be allowed on either side of either controversy. In addition to the coal strike there is now a strike of approximately 400,000 railway shopmen, a strike which may disrupt the entire transportation fabric of the country in the event of failure to reach a settlement within the reasonably early future. Irrespective of the merits or demerits on either side so far as the issues upon which the strikes were organized are concerned, the administration should absolutely require general compliance with its orders. If the decisions of the board regarding wages and other issues are based upon wrong principles, some method other than that of open defiance of the board's authority must be devised in order to procure the desired changes.

No individual, no agency, no group can claim any particular credit for its part in organizing, combating or undertaking to settle the coal strike or the railroad strike. It is apparent that the situation has been generally bungled from practically every angle. The time has arrived for adoption of definite, systematic and firm methods with a view to effecting settlements of this industrial warfare. The welfare of the great class known as the public, as well as the welfare of the principals in the controversies, demands such action.

Commissioner Blair has gone to Blowing Rock. Elmer Dover, however, continues the pastime of Throwing Bricks at the commissioner, judging by news dispatches.

The weight of 1,200 pounds had been attained by a swordfish caught in Hawaiian waters, it is reported. That's almost in a class with some of those ukelele stories.

Aggressive newspaper correspondents declare Lenin is now farming. Well, he has raised enough sand and another commodity which doesn't look well in print; perhaps he will do better in the raising of farm products.

In his discussion of prize fights in which it is proposed that he take part, Jack Dempsey is about as definite as Republican congressmen on the bonus question.

POLITICAL CONSIDERATIONS

There is much apparent agitation among the negroes in this country for the passage of the Dyer anti-lynching bill. They have been centering their efforts largely upon the Republican party, camping upon the trails of Republican members of the senate judiciary committee in an attempt to club them into making a favorable report upon the bill. The negroes evidently think that they have the Republicans in a tight place. Many Republicans will vote for the measure if it comes up.

It is the belief of many legal authorities that the Dyer anti-lynching bill is unconstitutional. Such a law, it is believed, would be an encroachment upon the rights of the states. Laws made by the individual states would certainly be more effective in reducing lynchings. The penalties in the Dyer bill are such that officers of the law would perhaps look the other way to avoid seeing violations of the law so as to escape responsibility. Residents of a state would resent soldiers of another state called in when there are state troops available. Entire counties would become bankrupt. Think what would be the result if suits for damage were brought for the deaths at the hands of the mob at Herrin, Ill. Single lynchings take place in the Southern states, but not wholesale killings as in Illinois. Many Republicans are trying to pass the Dyer bill solely because of pressure brought upon them by the negroes. They would probably undertake to "save their bacon" by passage of a measure which many of them know to be unconstitutional and plainly inimical to the best interest of the country.

"SAVING" CLAIMS

It is so easy to make claims. For example, take the claim of the Republicans in Congress that they have "saved" billions of dollars.

The saving was made by the sale of war material. It was sold for a great deal less than its cost, of course. Nobody would expect it to sell for its purchase price. It could not possibly be sold for as much. But the billions that it brought were not saved. If a man buys an article he needs and then finds that he does not need it and sells it for, say $50, half or less than he paid for it, he has not saved $50. Some folks might call it saving it. The Republicans do. Look, they say, here is $50; we are spending that much less. That's saving money, isn't it?

Other preposterous claims of economy can be punctured just like Senator Pat Harrison, of Mississippi, punctured that one. The Republicans may be good mathematicians, able to do anything with figures, but the figures do not mean anything.

This is the test: Is every dollar being wisely expended by the government or is some of it being wasted? When the Republicans can show that it is not being wasted then will be time to consider seriously their claims of economy. They have failed as yet to show that. Who honestly believes that the expenditure of federal public funds is unaccompanied by waste?

Between the fireworks and the weatherworks some Fourth of July celebrants had a great time.

MOSTLY NONSENSE

By Gee Gee Dee.

WHAT WOULD BE the general effect if all the people in North Carolina were to enter into a solemn agreement to eschew discussion of the weather for a period of 90 days? Of course it would be necessary to provide drastic penalties for violation of such an agreement. For the first offense a fellow might be required to get along without dinner for six successive days. For the second infraction of the regulations the penalty might be enforced instruction of the neighbor's cat in the highest notes of feline music. Then for the third violation the culprit might be sentenced to read one of Senator McCumber's speeches on the tariff, while as punishment for the fourth offense two weeks devoted to study of Henry Cabot Lodge's foreign policies could be prescribed.

Even with those drastic penalties, however, it is unlikely that such an agreement could be observed with anything like unanimity. Now, there is no gainsaying the fact that with conversation regarding the weather ruled out the average person would not suffer nearly so much from climatic extremes as under present conditions. You walk across your cornfield, admiring the beauty of it, or perhaps wondering if that late patch will mature before the annual advent of J. Frost, Esq., when suddenly you meet Jim Smith. Jim is a close observer of the Weather Man's antics and he wants you to realize that fact, so he begins the conversation with the remark that "It must be goin' t' rain, 'cause it's so dag-gone hot," or he facetiously inquires, "Is it hot enough for you?" Immediately you recall that it is the hottest day of the year and again you begin to perspire. What's a pretty field of corn if the thermometer is fraternizing with numerals in the neighborhood of 95; especially when your acquaintance has reminded you of that painful fact? On the other hand, if you had been permitted to think of your crops instead of the heat wave you certainly would have suffered less from the blistering rays of the midsummer sun.

It cannot be denied, however, that placing a ban upon discussion of the weather would greatly limit conversational activity. The man who remembers that driest of all dry years back in the eighties would not be appreciated at his real worth. The fellow who can tell you of the time that the creek washed at least 186 mudcats into Henry Jones' corn bottoms would be greatly handicapped. Then there is the incomprehensibly cheerful person who along about this time of year loves to tell you how many snows there were last winter and the exact depth of each snowfall—surely he could not be restrained by a mere agreement even if sharp penalties were attached. The bashful swain (all the swains of whom we have ever had any knowledge when referred to as swains were described as bashful) would be hopelessly handicapped in his efforts to break the news to the idol of his dreams that he desired that she should become his own—for keeps and all that, you know. No longer could he begin the fateful conversation with the remark, "It's a fine day, ain't it?" or the observation, "If it don't rain before Tuesday I'm going to have my car washed in time for the 'tracted meetin'."

No, such a scheme simply would not prove practical and we are not advocating it. By the way, did you ever see such a hot summer?

Senator Porter J. McCumber, By the voters made a back number. His wild tariff views partly the cause, Gone, another G. O. P. warhorse.

FINISH FORD MOTOR NUMBER 6,000,000

Six Million Cars Is Output of Ford Factory Since the Month of October, 1908

Ford motor No. 6,000,000 was lifted from the assembly line in the Highland Park Ford plant at 9:14 a. m., May 18. Just 5 1-3 seconds later No. 6,000,001 was finished.

The unusually heavy demand for Ford cars and trucks at the present time has necessitated the building of 5,400 daily. These are shipped in carlots to the various Ford assembling plants throughout the United States.

The first model "T" Ford motor was completed on October 1, 1908; No. 1,000,000 left the assembly line December 10, 1915; No. 5,000,000 came through May 28, 1921.

Although the Ford Motor company turned out a number of different models prior to 1907, the present numbering system began with the first model "T."

Hot Bread Not Always Cause of Indigestion

Hot bread is often thought to cause indigestion, but the United States Department of Agriculture says that when it does so it is because it lacks some of the characteristics of good bread, not because it is hot. Large or thick biscuits, whether raised with yeast, baking powder, or soda, are likely, if cooked only a short time, to be soggy on the inside, and this, when it happens, is the objection to them, rather than the fact that they are served hot.

SWEET POTATO CO-OP MAKES GOOD SHOWING

Tar River Potato Growers' Association of Rocky Mount, Solves Marketing Problem

The Tar River Co-operative Sweet Potato Growers' association recently made a final report on last season's business, showing that its members averaged $1.45 1-3 a bushel on the three grades sold by the association.

C. D. Matthews, of the North Carolina Division of Horticulture, who attended the association meeting, states that the association has paid off its final checks to grower members on the year's business and retired the first installment of preferred stock issued for warehouses. Warehousing charges were 12.5 cents, and selling charges 16.5 cents a bushel, whole 29.5 cents a bushel went to retire preferred stock. This left growers 86.5 cents net cash, plus 29.5 cents in common stock, which pays 8 per cent. interest.

Because of the drought last year, the association did not handle the expected volume of sweet potatoes, and hence the unit costs ran higher than they would have in a normal year.

The potatoes were cured in houses built in accordance with plans furnished by the state and federal departments of agriculture, which insured uniform curing of the potatoes.

The success of this, the first co-operative sweet potato association to organize under the standard co-operative marketing agreement, has resulted in a number of other communities starting similar associations. The business men of Rocky Mount are credited with making the association possible through purchase of the preferred warehouse stock and the encouragement of the growers in their organization plans. Growers who produced as much as 150 bushels an acre received $129 cash an acre, or $174 an acre counting the value of common stock representing warehouses. This figure compares favorably with the acre returns from cotton or some of the other staple crops.

Aided By Strong Weevil

The broad-nosed grain weevil, which is prevalent in Florida and occasionally found in Georgia and South Carolina, can not attack whole grain or seed of a medium degree of hardness, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. The rice weevil, however, with which it is commonly associated, begins the attack, making it a simple matter for the weaker insect to reach the softer parts of the grain. Cracked, damaged, or soft seed is quickly infested by the broad-nosed grain weevil.

SYNOPSIS

Donna Rosa, the wife of Don Esteban Varona, wealthy and aristocratic Cuban planter, dies in giving birth to twins, a boy and a girl. She was one of three possessors of the secret of a hiding place of a great store of gold and jewels concealed in a well, along with deeds to Varona's property, the other two being Varona and a giant negro slave of his, Sebastian. Pancho Cueto, Varona's plantation manager, strives to get the slave to disclose the hiding place, hinting that Varona will sell the negro's daughter, Evangelina, but the slave refuses, as he does when Donna Isabel, Havana beauty, who becomes Varona's second wife, makes the same effort. The latter tries to induce Varona to sell the slave girl. When the twin children of Varona, Esteban and Rosa, were seven years old their father, while drunk at cards, lost their nurse, Evangelina, daughter of the slave Sebastian, in a wager to one of his guests. The next day Sebastian, remonstrating with his master about it, was tied to a grating, cruelly whipped, and left chained. Returning later in the day, Varona, with several guests, stopped and taunted the negro, who became insane, wrenching himself free from the grating and killing Varona and two of his companions and was himself shot and killed. With Varona and Sebastian went the secret of the hiding place of Varona's wealth in gold and jewels and the deeds to his large estates.

CHAPTER III "The O'Reilly"

Age and easy living had caused Don Mario de Castano, the sugar merchant, to take on weight. He had, in truth, become so fat that he waddled like a penguin when he walked; and when he rode, the springs of his French victoria gave up in despair. They tried themselves, together, face to face and Don Mario felt every rut and every rock any less heavy in mind than in body, for he was both very rich and very serious, and nothing is more ponderous than a rich, fat man who takes his riches and his fatness seriously.

In disposition Don Mario was practical and unromantic; he boasted that he had never had an illusion, never an interest outside of his business. And yet, on the day this story opens, this prosaic personage, in spite of his bulging waistband and his taut neckband, in spite of his short breath and his prickly heat, was in a very whirl of pleasurable excitement. Don Mario, in fact, suffered the greatest of all illusions: he was in love, and he believed himself beloved. The object of his adoration was little Rosa Varona, the daughter of his one-time friend Esteban. At thought of her the planter glowed with ardor—at any rate he took it to be ardor, although it might have been the fever from that summer rash which so afflicted him—and his heart fluttered in a way dangerous to one of his apoplectic tendencies. To be sure, he had met Rosa only twice since her return from her Yankee school, but twice had been enough; with prompt decision he had resolved to do her the honor of making her his wife.

Now, with a person of Don Mario's importance, to decide for himself is to decide for others, and inasmuch as he knew that Donna Isabel, Rosa's stepmother, was notoriously mercenary and had not done at all well since her husband's death, it did not occur to him to doubt that his suit would prosper. It was, in fact, to make terms with her that he rode forth in the heat of this particular afternoon.

Notwithstanding the rivulets of perspiration that were coursing down every fold of his flesh, and regardless of the fact that the body of his victoria was tipped at a drunken angle, as if struggling to escape the burdens of his great weight, Don Mario felt a jaunty sense of body and of spirit almost like that of youth. He saw himself as a splendid prince riding toward the humble home of some obscure maiden whom he had graciously chosen to be his mate.

His arrival threw Donna Isabel into a flutter; the woman could scarcely contain her curiosity when she came to meet him, for he was not the sort of man to inconvenience himself by mere social visits. Their first formal greetings over, Don

Mario surveyed the bare living-room and remarked, lugubriously: "I see many changes here."

"No doubt," the widow agreed. "Times have been hard since poor Esteban's death."

"What a terrible calamity that was! I shudder when I think of it," said he. "I was his guest on the night previous, you remember? In fact, I witnessed his wager of the negro girl, Evangelina—the root of the whole tragedy. Well, well! Who would have believed that old slave, her father, would have run mad at losing her? A shocking affair, truly! and one I shall never get out of my mind."

"Shocking, yes. But what do you think of a rich man, like Esteban, who would leave his family destitute? Who would die without revealing the place where he had stored his treasure?"

Donna Isabel, it was plain, felt her wrongs keenly; she spoke with as much spirit as if her husband had permitted himself to be killed purely out of spite toward her.

De Castano shook his round bullet head, saying with some impatience: "You still believe in that treasure, eh? My dear senora, the only treasure Varona left was his adorable children—and your admirable self." Immediately the speaker regretted his words, for he remembered, too late, that Donna Isabel was reputed to be a trifle unbalanced on this subject of the Varona treasure.

"I do not believe, I know!" the widow answered, with more than necessary vehemence. "What became of all Esteban's money if he did not bury it? He never gave any to me, or he was a miser. You know, as well as I, that he carried on a stupendous business in slaves and sugar, and it was common knowledge that he hid every peso for fear of his enemies. But where? Where? That is the question."

"You, if any one, should know, after all the years you have spent in hunting for it," the merchant observed. "Dios mio! Almost before Esteban was buried you began the search. People said you were going to tear this house down."

"Well, I never found a trace. I had holes dug in the gardens, too."

"You see? No, senora, it is possible to hide anything except money. No man can conceal that where another will not find it."

Isabel's face had grown hard and avaricious, even during this brief talk; her eyes were glowing; plainly she was as far as ever from giving up her long-cherished conviction.

"I don't ask anybody to believe the story," she said, resentfully. "All the same, it is true. There are pieces of Spanish gold and silver coins, in boxes bound with iron and fitted with hasps and staples; packages of gems; pearls from the Caribbean as large as plums. Oh! Sebastian told me all about it."

"Of course, of course! I shall not argue the matter," Don Mario dismissed the subject with a wave of his plump hand. "Now, Donna Isabel—"

"As if it were not enough to lose that treasure," the widow continued, stormily, "the Government must free all our slaves. Tse! Tse! And now that there is no longer a profit in sugar, my plantations—"

"No profit in sugar? What are you saying?" queried the caller.

"Oh, you have a way of prospering! What touches your fingers turns to gold. But you are not at the mercy of an administrator."

"Precisely! I am my own manager. If your crops do not pay, then Pancho Cueto is cheating you. He is capable of it. Get rid of him. But I didn't come here to talk about Esteban's hidden treasure, nor his plantations, nor Pancho Cueto. I came here to talk about your stepdaughter, Rosa."

"So?" Donna Isabel looked up quickly.

"She interests me. She is more beautiful than the stars," Don Mario rolled his eyes toward the high ceiling, which, like the sky, was tinted a vivid cerulean blue. "She personifies every virtue; she is—delectable." He pursed his wet lips, faintly picked a kiss from between them with his thumb and finger, and snapped it into the air.

Inasmuch as Isabel had always hated the girl venomously, she did not trust herself to comment upon her caller's enthusiasm.

"She is now eighteen," the fat suitor went on, ecstatically, "and so altogether charming—But why waste my time in pretty speeches? I have decided to marry her."

De Castano plucked a heavily scented silk handkerchief from his pocket and wiped a beading of moisture from his brow and upper lip. He had a habit of perspiring when roused from his usual lethargy.

"Rosa has a will of her own," guardedly ventured the stepmother.

Don Mario broke out, testily: "Naturally; so have we all. Now let us speak plainly. You know me. I am a person of importance. I am rich enough to afford what I want, and I pay well. You understand? Well, then, you are Rosa's guardian and you can bend her to your desires."

"If that were only so!" exclaimed the woman. "She and Esteban—what children! What tempers! Just like their father's! They have never liked me; they disobey me at every opportunity; they exercise the most diabolical ingenuity in making life miserable. You know, and they blame me for his death, for our poverty, and for all the other misfortunes that have overtaken us. We live like cats and dogs."

Don Mario had been drumming his fat fingers impatiently upon the arm of his chair. Now he exclaimed: "I am interested in your domestic relations; they do not thrill me—as my own prospective happiness does. What you say about Rosa only makes me more eager, for I loathe a sleepy woman. Now tell me, is she—Has she any affairs of the heart?"

N-no, unless perhaps a flirtation with that young American, Juan O'Reilly," Donna Isabel gave the name its Spanish pronunciation of "O'Reilly."

"Juan O'Reilly? O'Reilly? Oh yes! But what has he to offer a woman? He is little more than a clerk."

"That is what I tell her. Oh, R hasn't gone far as yet."

"Good!" Don Mario rose to leave, for the exertion of his ride had made him thirsty. "You may name your own reward for helping me and I will pay it the day Rosa marries me. Now kindly advise her of my intentions and tell her I shall come to see her soon."

It was quite true that Johnnie O'Reilly—or "The O'Reilly," as his friends called him—had little in the way of worldly advantage to offer any girl, and it was precisely because of this fact that he had accepted a position here in Cuba, where, from the very nature of things, promotion was likely to be more rapid than in the New York office of his firm. He had come to this out-of-the-way place prepared to live the lonely life of an exile, if an O'Reilly could be lonely anywhere, and for a brief time he had been glad enough.

But the O'Reillys, from time immemorial, had been born and bred to exile; it was their breath, their meat and drink, and this particular member of the clan thrived upon it quite as well as had the other Johnnies and Michaels and Andys who had journeyed to far shores. The O'Reillys were audacious men, a bit too heedless of their own good, perhaps; a bit too light-hearted readily to impress a grave world with their varied abilities, but sterling men, for all that, ambitious men, men with a lime in their bones and possessed of a high and ready chivalry that made friends for them wherever their wandering feet strayed. Spain, France, and the two Americas had welcomed O'Reillys of one sort or another; even Cuba had the family name written large upon her scroll.

So Johnnie, of New York and Matanzas, although at first he felt himself a stranger in a strange land, was not so considered by the Cubans.

A dancing eye speaks language; a singing heart gathers its own audience. Before the young Irish-American had more than a bowing acquaintance with the commonest Spanish verbs he had a calling acquaintance with some of the most exclusive people of Matanzas. He puzzled them, to be sure, for they could not fathom the reason for his ever-budding gladness, but they strove to catch its secret, and, striving, they made friends with him. O'Reilly did not puzzle their daughters nearly so much; more than one aristocratic senorita felt sure that she quite understood the tall, blond stranger with the laughing eyes, or could understand him if he gave her half a chance, and so, as had been the case with other O'Reillys in other lands, Johnnie's exile became no exile at all. He had adjusted himself serenely to his surroundings when Rosa Varona returned from school, but with her coming, away went all his complacency. His contentment vanished; he experienced a total change in his opinions, his hopes, and his ambitions.

He discovered, for example, that Matanzas was by no means the out-of-the-way place he had considered it; on the contrary, after meeting Rosa once by accident, twice by design, and three times by mutual arrangement, it had dawned upon him that this was the chief city of Cuba, if not, perhaps, the hub around which the whole world revolved; certainly it was the most agreeable of all cities, since it contained everything that was necessary for man's happiness. Yet, despite the thrill of his awakening, O'Reilly was not at all pleased with himself, for, as it happened, there was another girl back home, and during his first year of loneliness he had written to her more freely and more frequently than any man on such a salary as his had a right to do.

O'Reilly laid no claims to literary gifts; nevertheless, it seemed to him, as he looked back upon it, that his pen must have been dipped in magic and in moonlight, for the girl had expressed an eager willingness to share his interesting economic problems, and in fact was waiting for him to give her the legal right. Inasmuch as her father was O'Reilly's "Company" it may be seen that Rosa Varona's home-coming seriously complicated matters, not only from a sentimental, but from a business standpoint.

It was in a thoughtful mood that he rode up Le Cumbre toward the Quinta de Esteban, late on the afternoon of Don Mario's visit. Instead of going directly to the house as the merchant had done, O'Reilly turned off from the road and, after tethering his horse in a cluster of guava-bushes, proceeded on foot. He did not like Donna Isabel; nor did Donna Isabel like him. Moreover, he had a particular reason for avoiding her today.

Open Wells
There have been so many inquiries about open wells, and for that matter, wells of all kinds, that I think it would not be amiss to discuss this question. First I wish to state as a fact that practically all open wells are polluted. I mean by "open wells" those that have a bucket and windlass with a rope or chain. The records of the State Laboratory show that practically all wells over the state, that have a bucket and windlass are polluted, and my own experience in the county has convinced me that this is the case, for I do not recollect to have ever gotten a good reject from such a well. Now just what do we mean when we say a well is polluted? The general idea is that it has typhoid germs in it. This, however, is incorrect. What it does mean is that the water has colon bacilli in it. Now colon bacilli are the common germs found in the intestines of man and animals, and are always present in the excrement. The microscopic appearance of that germ is so similar to the typhoid germ that it takes time to make a distinction. So reports as to water always state that the glow one colon bacilli. So it means that there is excrement of man or animal in the water.
Most of the pollution gets in from the top, in many ways, but principally from dirty hands.
I say this because pump wells and wells with small buckets on a chain are seldom found polluted. So the best thing is a pump to prevent pollution and having the curb so no surface water can get into the well.

EVOLUTION

Plenty of us remember the day we saw for the first time the snorting, puffing monster of steel and iron which was called the Horseless Carriage. So crude it was, so uncertain in operation we wonder how on earth any one was induced to buy it. Through the years the Automotive vehicle has become so perfected that to-day men buy automobiles not on appearance, not on performance BUT ON THE BASIS OF ECONOMICAL TRANSPORTATION. The man who looks ahead asks first of all "HOW MANY MILES TO THE GALLON," then "WHAT IS THE LIFE IN MILES OF THIS PARTICULAR CAR?" Concerns who make automobiles which have become STANDARD IN THEIR CLASS welcome this sort of questioning, it makes it easier for them to sell. Take the Buick for instance, the cost of operation, maintenance and depreciation of the total initial cost brings the cost per mile to you down to a figure so absurdly low you will be astonished when you have it figured out for you. If you consider buying a car be sure to ask the man you buy from the questions above, if he cannot answer satisfactorily AND GIVE ASSURANCE OF SATISFACTION he's not the man to trade with.

Rheumatism at 60

S. S. S. Thoroughly Rids the Body of Rheumatism Impurities.

Somebody's mother is suffering tonight. The scourge of rheumatism has wrecked her body; limping and suffering, bent forward, she sees but the common ground, but her aged heart still belongs to the stars! Does anybody care? S. S. S. is one of the greatest blood-purifiers known, and it helps build more blood cells. Its medicinal ingredients are purely vegetable. It never disarranges the stomach. It is, in fact, a splendid tonic, a blood maker, a blood enricher. It banishes rheumatism from joints, muscles and the entire body. It builds firm flesh. It is what somebody's mother needs tonight! Mother, if you can not go out to get a bottle of S. S. S. yourself, surely somebody in your family will. Let somebody's mother begin to feel joyful again tonight. Maybe, maybe it's your mother! S. S. S. is sold at all drug stores, in two sizes. The larger size is the more economical.

How glorious you will feel, Mother, when your rheumatism is all gone. Let S. S. S. do it. It will build you up, too!

P. T. HIGHFILL HAS LIVE-AT-HOME PLAN

Successful Guilford County Farmer
Exhibits Transparent Apples and Other Great Food Products

People who might be disposed to question the horticultural possibilities of Guilford county will doubtless find it profitable to witness the activities of P. T. Highfill, of Route 1, Summerfield, in fruit production, for Mr. Highfill is attaining an enviable record in that sphere.

The other day Mr. Highfill walked into the office of The Patriot bearing a box under his arm, announcing that it contained a gift for the editor. With assurances that the receptacle did not contain a bomb or other explosive matter the visitor, who, incidentally, has been a subscriber of The Patriot for a quarter of a century, opened the box, in which were found a handsome collection of apples of the Transparent variety, also a group of unusually large and attractive Irish potatoes.

The apples are splendid specimens, toothsome and seemingly perfect in every respect. At his plantation about two miles from Summerfield Mr. Highfill has two of those apple trees—the Transparent kind—from which he has already sold a vast quantity of fruit. As a matter of fact, the proceeds from this year's sales from the two trees aggregate a sum greater than the original cost of the orchard land.

Mr. Highfill is a truly progressive farmer, one who "lives at home." Long before Governor Morrison inaugurated his "Live-at-Home" campaign this Guilford county farmer was successfully practicing that doctrine. With him tobacco is simply a sideline; most of his work is centered in the production and marketing of food and feed crops.

Notwithstanding the fact that the wheat crop generally in this section is far below the average, Mr. Highfill will probably get a yield of 75 per cent. or more on his late wheat. On his early wheat the percentage of yield will be less, the season having militated against early grain crops. In such cases the heads as a rule were not well filled out.

Often Mr. Highfill sells substantial quantities of wheat, corn and other food crops. He has found that diversified farming really pays. Such farmers do not have to buy their apples from Oregon, cereals from Florida. With the passing of each year Mr. Highfill becomes more thoroughly convinced of the efficacy of the idea that the farmer should at least raise his own food crops and if practicable raise such commodities for a number of other people.

Textile Wins From Bessemer

Because of rain and wet grounds only one game was played Tuesday in the county league. In this game Textile defeated the Bessemer club by a 12 to 6 score, the tilt having been called in the eighth inning on account of rain.

The textile bunch took a good lead in the early part of the game and Bessemer made a strong effort towards the last but was unable to tie the score. Both G. and F. Buchanan were hit hard by the Textile bunch, Dave Harris being the heaviest puncher.

SUCCESSFUL MONTH AT CHILDREN'S HOME

Constructing $100,000 Building.
Planning Another To Cost $20,000—Monthly Report

During the month of June the Children's Home society of North Carolina had 44 new cases reported and during the past six months has handled 120 children, which is an increase of about 20 per cent. over the same period in 1921. There was a slight outbreak of measles in the home during June, but it is believed that all danger is passed.

Building operations on Sunshine cottage will probably begin during the summer. The cost of this building will be about $20,000 and available funds amount to $7,500. Officials, however, have faith that the remaining funds needed will be procured. A garage and isolation ward has been completed where children will be placed temporarily pending their examination and clinical diagnosis made before being placed in the receiving home. The cost of this building will be approximately $1,000 and has been paid for in full.

Following is the statistical report for the month of June submitted by Superintendent John J. Phoenix:

New cases reported 44; adjustments made by the superintendents of public welfare, 18; applications withdrawn, 18; new homes offered for children, 50; homes accepted, 26; homes rejected, 24; homes under investigation, 267; homes withdrawn by applicants, 10; children received, 24; children placed, 15; homes supervised by superintendents of public welfare, 25; reports received from foster parents, 54; homes supervised by personal representative of the society, 67; legal adoptions executed, 5; children in boarding homes, 6; children in hospital, 1; children in the receiving home, June 30, 1922, 30; children in boarding school, 1; ran away from foster homes (found and returned), 1; ran away from receiving home (found and returned), 2.
