

GREAT RALLY FOR FARMERS

Notable Events At Battle-ground Saturday

EXPECT LARGE CROWD

James H. Craig, Treasurer of Tri-State Association and Other Speakers To Be Heard at Mammoth Picnic

Final plans are being perfected for the great farmers' rally and picnic to be held at Guilford Battle-ground Saturday, under the auspices of the North Carolina Tobacco Growers association, District No. 11, in conjunction with the Guilford County Farm bureau, according to John W. King, chairman of the arrangements committee and president of the Central Carolina Warehousing corporation.

Tobacco growers from the counties of Randolph, Caswell, Rockingham and Guilford are expected to participate in the picnic and it is expected that they will be there by the thousands. Officials are hopeful that not less than 5,000 will be present; they expect to make this the greatest affair in the agricultural life of North Carolina.

Picnic dinner will be served on a long table at the Battle-ground. People are urged to bring the proverbial well filled baskets.

Some of the most forceful speakers from among the leadership of the co-operative association will address the crowds, and leaders of the enterprise feel that any farmer who attends will be greatly benefited. The speakers will mainly discuss the aims, objects, and accomplishments of the co-operative associations together with other subjects of mutual interest to farmers of the counties. Officials extend an invitation to everybody interested in farm problems.

The meeting will start at 11 o'clock in the morning. The farm bureau will have charge of the morning program. A representative from this district of the North Carolina Farm Bureau federation will be the principal speaker.

Following the farm bureau program the great picnic dinner will be served, after which the program of the co-operative association will be presented. During the day free lemonade will be dispensed.

James H. Craig, of Anderson, S. C., treasurer of the Tri-State Tobacco Growers' association, will deliver the principal address of the day. Mr. King says that he heard Mr. Craig speak at a rally at Pilot Mountain recently and that he considers him one of the most forceful speakers he has ever heard.

Another speaker of prominence will be C. E. Marvin, of the burley tobacco district of Kentucky. Mr. Marvin will tell of the great success of co-operative marketing in that state.

Dr. J. Y. Joyner, of Raleigh, one of the leaders of the co-operative movement in this state, will probably speak. This has not been definitely arranged.

Efforts are being made to secure the services of a brass band for the day.

SANITARY MEASURES FEATURE OF REPORT

County Health Officer Accomplishes Much In Regard To Inspection Work and Examinations

The report of Dr. William M. Jones, county health officer, for June reveals the fact that the county health department accomplished much during the past month. A sanitary inspector has been doing some excellent work in inspection of privies over the county. Conditions at the county home, camp, and jail seem to be satisfactory.

Following is the detailed report of Dr. Jones:

County home—Here only six calls have been made. One case came in a dying condition and lived only a few days. I recommended that we have a regular form of blank made and that no case be allowed to enter before same has been properly filled out and signed. This blank is necessary and will save a great deal of worry, etc.

County camp—Here 15 calls have been made, the majority of which were not necessary. All the men at the camp have been given the prophylactic typhoid vaccine except those who were to get out before the injections could be completed, and those who had it last year.

County jail—Here only six calls have been made, all of which were for minor complaints.

Many examinations have been made for the state child labor law. We have had a venereal disease clinic at Pomona mills and Revolution mills, same being conducted by the state.

Office calls, 47; charity calls, 14; typhoid vaccination, 3x117; nuisances examined, 4; corrected, 2.

We now have a sanitary inspector who is making an examination of the privies and having the insanitary ones corrected. He reports that general conditions are in very good shape. He has done some very good work in sections where it was greatly needed.

Inspections—Whooping cough, 1; measles, 13; smallpox, 1; diphtheria, 1; typhoid fever, 4; Rock Creek, Gilmer, Clay and Morehead.

LARGE ATTENDANCE AT COUNTY SCHOOLS

Statistical Report Shows 27,042 Pupils In Guilford During Past Year. Other Interesting Figures

During the past year there was a marked increase in attendance at Guilford county schools and other signs of progress are disclosed in the statistical report for the year which has just been prepared by Thomas R. Foust, county superintendent of education.

The following is a brief summary of the salient features of the report: Guilford county schools were attended for the year by 27,042 pupils, an increase of 2,681 over the year before. Of these 13,330 were boys, and 13,712 were girls, of both races. The rural school census for 1921-1922 is whites 12,700, negroes 2,028, making a total of 15,728.

According to the report, there are 338 teachers employed in the rural schools, 313 white and 25 negroes. One hundred and ninety-six of these have had four or more years experience as teachers.

School districts number 118, 33 being white and 35 negro, one district has no house, and the decrease in districts during the year was four. For the purpose of transporting children to and from school 19 trucks are in use by the county; the number transported being 280. There are 125 libraries in the rural districts containing 14,158 volumes.

In Greensboro 6,800 whites and negroes attended; of this number 6,548 were white children. The total in High Point was 4,512, of which 1,001 were negroes.

The report on bonds was as follows: Outstanding school bonds, $70,500, bonds due $10,000 in 1947, $15,000 in 1948, $15,000 in 1949, $20,000 in 1950, and $10,000 in 1951.

There are 135 rural schools in the county valued at $293,709; of this $274,500 represents the white schools and $19,200 the negro schools.

COMMISSIONERS TO CONSIDER BUDGET

School Board To Submit Budget For Coming Year—To Test Validity of County School Tax In Court

The budget for the coming year for Guilford county schools has been prepared by the county board of education and will be submitted to the county commissioners at their next meeting, Tuesday, July 18, for consideration.

According to Thomas R. Foust, county superintendent of education, most of the teachers' have been secured for the coming year, and there will be no change in the general level of salaries in the county. Many of the teachers are taking advantage of the courses offered at the summer schools at the various colleges and universities in the state and elsewhere. Mr. Foust states that there are 94 teachers from this county at the North Carolina College for Women and the others are scattered principally among the following schools, University of North Carolina, University of Virginia, and the Appalachian Training school, at Boone.

Much will be expended by the school board during the coming year towards improving the physical facilities of Guilford schools. Work has begun recently on a new building at Pleasant Garden and plans are under consideration by the board for one at Gibsonville.

Steps are being taken to test the validity of the county-wide school equalization tax, adopted by the voters last spring. It is hoped that a decision can be obtained from the courts in October. In the meantime officials are making budget figures independently of the county-wide measure.

To Close Navy Yard
Washington, July 12.—Acting Secretary Roosevelt Monday signed an order closing the navy yard at Charleston, S. C., "as soon as practicable." While no date is set, it is expected the yard will be definitely closed by next fall.

Clerk Killed
Crewe, Va., July 12.—Russell Wiggins, a Norfolk and Western yard office clerk, was killed and an unidentified man was wounded, when someone shot into a crowd of picketing clerks at the station here last night.

WORK WILL BEGIN ON HOSPITAL SOON

County Tuberculosis Hospital To Be Built On Hill Point Road, Near Modern In The State

The hospital board met Tuesday afternoon in the office of Harry Barton and plans as drawn by Mr. Barton for the erection of the Guilford county tuberculosis hospital were accepted. Work will be started on the structure within the next 60 days.

On Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock the board will meet with the county commissioners and present their plans. The commissioners will be asked to sell the $100,000 worth of bonds recently voted by the people so that work can be begun at once.

Between 80 and 100 acres of land, located about nine miles from Greensboro on the Hill Point road, have been purchased for the site of the hospital. The building will be modern in every respect, with accommodations for both white and negro patients.

County Commissioners Hear Tax Complaints

The county commissioners, in extra session Monday heard approximately 25 complaints as to the assessed valuation of property in the county, alleging excessive valuation. In each case the commissioners and the citizens reached a satisfactory agreement.

J. A. Rankin, chairman of the board, stated that the new buildings at the county home are now occupied by the inmates and will soon be formally opened.

Tuesday, July 18, the board will hold its regular mid-monthly meeting.

Local Clerk Union To Vote On Strike

With an attendance of about 100 out of the membership of 131 the union of the Southern railway clerks met Tuesday night in regular meeting. The strike ballot was given out to be returned not later than July 20, at which time the decision will be made whether clerks belonging to that brotherhood shall walk out on the railroad companies or submit to the action of the board and accept recent cut in salaries.

J. W. Powell, local chairman, said that the entire southern union was in favor of the strike, but he would give no opinion as to the effect of a strike by the clerks. T. R. Foust, president of the local union, stated that they have few grievances against the Southern Railway company, but that a strike, if called, would be a refusal to abide by the decision handed down by the railroad labor board.

CORN AND WHEAT PRODUCTION CUT

County's Corn and Wheat Crop Is Smaller—Tobacco Acreage 122.9 Per Cent. of Last Year

Washington, July 12.—Production of corn, the country's most valuable farm crop, was forecast for this year at 2,860,000,000 bushels by the department of agriculture in its July report. That is 29,000,000 bushels more than last year's crop.

The country's wheat crop was forecast at 817,000,000 bushels, having been decreased by 38,000,000 bushels as a result of conditions in June.

Winter wheat production was forecast at 569,000,000 bushels and the condition on July 1 was 77.0 per cent. of a normal.

Spring wheat production was forecast at 248,000,000 bushels and the condition 83.7 per cent.

All wheat condition was 78.9 per cent. of a normal.

Corn production forecast was based on an estimated area of 103,234,000 acres, or 99.4 per cent of last year's acreage, and a condition of 85.1 per cent. of a normal on July 1.

Production forecasts and details of other crops were announced as follows:

Oats, production 1,187,000,000 bushels; condition 74.4.

Barley, production 182,000,000 bushels; condition 82.8.

Rye, production 82,000,000 bushels; condition 89.9.

White potatoes, production 429,000,000 bushels; condition 87.3; acreage 4,228,000 or 110.8 per cent. of last year's.

Sweet potatoes, production 111,000,000 bushels; condition 88.2; acreage 1,128,000 or 105.8 per cent. of last year's.

Tobacco, production 1,415,000,000 pounds; condition 82.4; acreage 1,763,000 or 122.9 per cent. of last year's.

Flax, production 10,700,000 bushels; condition 87.6; acreage 1,341,000, or 115.1 per cent. of last year's.

Rice, production 39,000,000 bushels; condition 88.6; acreage 1,000,000, or 110.8 per cent. of last year's.

Hay, production 107,000,000 tons; condition 88.7.

Apples, production 190,000,000 bushels, condition 66.8.

Peaches, production 54,300,000 bushels, condition 74.3.

Wheat remaining on farms July 1 is estimated at 31,641,000 bushels, or 4 per cent. of last year's crop.

EXPLOSION KILLS EIGHT CHILDREN

Children Blown To Pieces When 75-Millimeter Shell Explodes—Governor Used As Door Check

Watertown, N. Y., July 12.—Eight children ranging in age from 11 to 16 were blown to pieces late today by the explosion of a 75-millimeter shell on the back porch of a house in Dimmick street, occupied by Edward G. Workman and William L. Salisbury.

The shell, which was owned by Mr. Workman, was one which he had kept as a souvenir and used on the rear porch to hold the door from closing. It was believed to be "dead."

The children were playing croquet in the back yard. The shell is believed to have either been set off by the hot sun or to have been struck by one of the victims with a croquet mallet. Windows within a radius of two blocks of the place were smashed.

Must Furnish Current For Light and Power

Asheville, July 12.—The Southern Power company is enjoined from its threatened stoppage of current and power to the North Carolina Public Service company, furnishing the cities of Greensboro and High Point, as a result of the denying of a petition for rehearing, in the Circuit Court of Appeals yesterday.

This, according to legal authorities, practically ends the controversy between the two companies over the furnishing of power by the Southern Power company to the Public Service company through its substations at Greensboro and High Point, to operate the street car lines in both of said cities, and for the use and benefit of the municipalities and the citizens thereof for light and power, as is now being furnished.

It is asserted that the only step left for the power company will be to apply to the United States Supreme court for writ of certiorari.

Officers Named By Jewelers of State

Durham, July 12.—With the selection of Hendersonville as the place for the 18th annual convention in 1923 and the election of officers, the 17th annual convention of the North Carolina Retail Jewelers' association came to a close late this afternoon. The officers elected are as follows:

President, J. M. Fox, of Rocky Mount; vice-president, for Eastern North Carolina, A. J. Holmes, of Lumberton; vice-president for Central North Carolina, R. H. Leonard, of Mount Airy; vice-president for Western North Carolina, A. Homer Hawkins, of Hendersonville. W. G. Frazer, of Durham, was re-elected secretary-treasurer of the association.

WILL OPPOSE ANY CHANGE IN ROAD

Citizens to Meet at Rocky Knoll School Friday Evening to Oppose Elimination of Curve

In the Rocky Hill Knoll schoolhouse citizens living on the Greensboro-Randleman road will hold a mass meeting Friday evening to organize themselves to oppose the movement on foot to change the route of the present road.

The principal speaker of the occasion will be R. W. H. Stone, president of the North Carolina Farmers' union, who lives on the road a few miles from town.

It is proposed that the curve be eliminated in the road from South Elm street to the bridge over South Buffalo creek. Mr. Stone states that if this is done considerable unrest among the citizens in that neighborhood will result. If the curve is eliminated it will save only a few hundred yards of paving and about 15 families living on the road would be denied the privilege of residing on the proposed paved road. The wishes of 15 families who have invested their all in homes along a road they thought permanent cannot be ignored simply for the saving of a few hundred dollars, he said.

Decision by the State Highway commission will probably be announced Tuesday, July 18, in regard to the Randleman road and the Pleasant Garden road as well.

Furniture Exposition Opens in High Point

With a record-breaking crowd for the first day the semi-annual July furniture exposition opened in High Point Monday. This is the largest show in the South. The largest and best histories in the country are represented in the 10-story exposition building, displaying furniture, stoves, draperies, and other household furnishings.

END OF STRIKE SEEMS NEARER

Hold Secret Conference Toward Settling It

HARDING TAKES HAND

Issues Proclamation Calling For Protection of Transportation and Mails—Fresh Disorders At Scattered Points

Chicago, July 12.—A last refusal to meet with B. M. Jewell, head of the striking shopmen, to discuss peace proposals was the answer last night of railway executives to a proposal made by Ben W. Hooper, chairman of the United States railroad labor board.

Chicago, July 12.—Settlement of the rail strike seemed possibly a step nearer today when it was disclosed that secret conferences have been held between Ben W. Hooper, chairman of the Railroad Labor board and leaders of the six striking shop crafts.

No definite conclusions were reached as a result of the secret peace meetings, but disclosure of the conferences, which were described as more personal than official raised hopes in the railroad world.

President Harding's intervention in the strike through his proclamation calling for protection of transportation and the mails was accepted as bearing such significance and expectant eyes were turned toward Washington and the labor board in anticipation of further developments.

Fresh disorders occurred at scattered points, while troops patrolled former trouble centers; arrangements for a conference today by the "big four" trade service brotherhoods, and an announcement by B. M. Jewell, head of the striking shop crafts, that conferences were planned with representatives of 21 northwestern roads, were among other important developments in the rail strike today.

Additional injunctions restraining strikers from interfering with railway operators were granted to several roads.

New appeals for troops were made to the governors of Mississippi, Tennessee and Texas, while Governor Boyle, of Nevada, was asked by the Union Pacific for state intervention in the strike at Las Vegas.

The situation at Bloomington, Ill., remained tense with troops holding the yards and shops. Frequent shooting and the general hostile attitude of strikers and large crowds of sympathizers kept national guardsmen on constant vigilance. Meanwhile city and county authorities were attempting to re-establish civil government.

Engineers, firemen, trainmen and conductors announced that they would refuse to enter the Alton yards at Bloomington to take out their trains as long as machine guns bristled in the shops. They voted to operate only mail trains unless the trains were delivered to them outside the shop district during the encampment of the troops in the yard.

The "big four" brotherhood chiefs were called in conference for the purpose of discussing issues growing out of the shopmen's strike.

Shop crafts leaders expressed satisfaction over the success of the strike, while most roads were non-committal.

Mr. Jewell, commenting on President Harding's proclamation, said the way to end the strike was to call a conference of railroad executives and shop crafts leaders.

Tentative proposals considered in the peace conferences included the following:

That the railroads abolish the contract system of farming out work to contractors.

That certain working rules governing overtime pay be modified.

That the shopmen be given another hearing on the wage issue.

That the railroads agree to establish boards of adjustment to hear all disputes except those involving wages.

METAL TRADE UNIONS WILL NOT REPAIR LOCOMOTIVES

Washington, July 13.—Members of all unions affiliated with the Metal Trades department of the American Federation of Labor were instructed in orders sent out yesterday from the headquarters here that no further repair work will be authorized on locomotives coming from railroads on which strikes are in progress, to outside shops employing union labor.

CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO CLERKS WILL WALK OUT

Richmond, July 13.—Clerks in the employ of the Chesapeake and Ohio railway from Newport News to Chicago are preparing to strike. Overtures of the road officials resulting from the conference held Tuesday were turned down by the clerks today.

A DISASTROUS PARTY

The International Sunday School Lesson,
By REV. E. P. BILLUPS,
Assistant Pastor West Market Street Methodist Church.

Daniel 5: 1-31

A Young King's Orgy.—In the lesson today we are introduced to a dissolute and debased young king, Belshazzar by name. He is wholly without ambition or moral stamina, and though circumstances placed upon him and the responsibilities of leadership, he is inattentive to the affairs of state as he betrays those who trust him and makes a coward and a fool of himself in general by his drunken revelries. He is a consummate egotist and a colossal failure because he thinks so much of himself. Vanity and pride are at the bottom of all self-indulgence. In this case pride led not only to revelry, but to sacrilege. It is always true that the man who mocks at the things of God, who has no reverence for holy things, who jeers at the Bible and sneers at the righteous man is "vain in his imaginations and wise in his own conceits." He is the fellow who boasts that he is a self-made man and worships his maker. A humble man may be guilty of some sin, but he will never be guilty of sacrilege. This young king who had crucified every good instinct within him, joined with his companions, the feast of revelry. In his drunken frenzy he calls for the sacred vessels which had been removed from the temple at Jerusalem, the vessels made precious by their many holy associations, orders them filled with wine and gives them to his guests. Then amidst the roars of hilarity and merriment they all drink to their bloody and indecent delirium. They do not feast long; for there is a sudden interruption. There is a sudden halt, a terrible silence, and a fearful dread. The trembling king sees a hand, dreadfully impersonal, writing on the wall the words which seal his doom: "Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin."

The Puzzled Sages.—The king calls upon his astrologers to interpret the writing. But they cannot, for they are of the same stripe as the king. What do they know about spiritual things? For his helpers, the king turned in the wrong direction, just as many do today. Young men and women who have made failures in life will be found quite uniformly to have chosen wrong associates. They have gone to the wrong persons, the wrong books, the wrong places of amusement. Consequently they have nothing to lean upon in time of trouble. In seeking friendships it is well for young people to remember the words of Emerson: "Only be admonished by what you already see, not to strike leagues of friendship with cheap persons, where no friendship can be." One's ideals and aspirations are reflected in the choice of one's friends. The friends of the king, the astrologers, were not able to read the writing on the wall. It is just another example of the "wisdom of the world being baffled by the simplicities of God." There are those of Belshazzar's brigade today who are just as blind. With their offensive disloyal attitude toward the law they say, "See how impossible it is to enforce prohibition!" They cannot read the handwriting. Sooner or later they must be brought to a realization of this truth, and the sooner the better. The eighteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States, the expressed will of the people, (let Belshazzar and his advocates of "personal liberty" study the facts) is the "Mene, mene, tekel, upharsin" of the liquor traffic.

The Writing Interpreted. Through the queen-mother the king heard of Daniel and called him in to interpret the writing. The king offered the prophet rich gifts, but Daniel refused. "Let thy gifts be to thyself, and give thy rewards to another; nevertheless, I will read the writing unto the king, and make known to him the interpretation." "Thou hast not humbled thy heart,"—but hast lifted up thyself against the Lord of heaven." While you and your nobles were leading a life of dissipation, God was (1) observing; He knew there was sin in your heart. (2) Weighing, your deeds were known to him and you "are weighed in the balances and found wanting." (3) Punishing, Your kingdom is divided, and given to the Medes and Persians. That night the forces of Cyrus entered the city and Belshazzar and his nobles were slain. So perished the man whose drunken folly made a jest of Jehovah.

The story of Belshazzar might have been different had he made a friendship with Daniel early in life, instead of relying upon the "enchancers." This story illustrates the importance of choosing the right friends and helpers. Our success is a matter of the choice of the right associates, the right partners, the right books, the right teachers and the right papers. This should be determined, not by chance, but by thoughtful and prayerful choice. And this should lead us to the choice of the one great Helper. When we choose Him first we shall not be allied with "enchancers."

The Test of Good Citizenship. "Loyal observance of the eighteenth amendment and of the laws and regulations for its enforcement has become the test of our respect for law. Those who take pleasure in flouting it, who bribe and corrupt, who lie and pervert, who would profane the vessels of the temple and would drink before the thousands, as Belshazzar did, if they happened to have his power, are being weighed, counted, measured as surely as Belshazzar was. They have still to learn that it is no good to praise the gods of silver and gold, of brass, iron, wood, stone, or any other container."

HAVE YOU $250.00 ?

The savings of small investors and savings depositors in the United States—represented by government securities and savings bank accounts—amount to the equivalent of $250 for every man, woman and child.

Some people have, of course, saved more than the average, while others have less. Some people have never started to save at all. Others have long ago realized that a savings account is one of the insurances of protection and freedom from want in old age.

This bank welcomes the accounts of thrifty savers and pays 4 per cent interest on savings accounts amounting to $1 or more.

Minor Watermelon Diseases

The wilt, root-knot, anthracnose, and stem-end rot already described are the only diseases which influence in a large way the culture of watermelons. Some other troubles, however, are met with occasionally, and these may be mentioned briefly.

Stem blight.—A fungus disease, produces an effect somewhat resembling wilt, but the vines tend to die from the center outward and diseased areas are visible on the stems, often with a gummy reddish exudate. Pull and burn diseased vines.

Bacterial wilt.—A serious trouble of cucumbers occasionally attacks watermelons. The greater number of cases of wilt in watermelons, however, are of the Fusarium type. The outward effects of the two diseases are much alike, but if one cuts the freshly wilted stem and on touching the finger to the exudate finds that it can be drawn out into fine mucilaginous strands, it may be concluded that bacterial wilt is present. Advice concerning remedial measures for bacterial wilt will be supplied by the Department of Agriculture upon application.

Downy mildew.—A leaf disease producing an effect similar to anthracnose, sometimes occurs, though it is more especially a cucumber trouble. Downy mildew does not attack the fruit. It is controlled by the spraying methods advised for anthracnose.

Malnutrition.—This produces a leaf spotting distinguishable from anthracnose in that the spots are lighter brown and are located around the leaf margins and between the veins. This trouble is attributed to lack of potash, but has not been sufficiently studied on watermelons to justify recommendations for preventing it during the present period of potash shortage.

Blossom-end rot is very common in most fields, but has been little studied. It seems to begin with an imperfect fruit, possibly due to defective pollination. Such culls are later invalidated by decay-producing fungi. The diploidia of stem-end rot is perhaps the most common, but other fungi also occur. Control measures consist in the prompt destruction of culls, to get rid of the infection.

Ground rot.—So called, because it begins at the side of the melon next to the soil, is due to a fungus very common in the South, which is characterized by an abundant growth of white mold and the formation of numerous roundish, brown bodies the sizes of buckshot. This decay begins in some crack or insect injury. The only control measure to be taken is the destruction of the affected fruits. A large number of vegetables and cultivated plants are attacked by this parasite.

Summary of Control Measures
Loss from wilt is avoided by planting on land not previously used for watermelon planting, which precautions against the use of infected stable manure and spread by drainage water and livestock.

Losses from root-knot can be prevented by the use of land free from infection by this pest.

Anthracnose is controlled by thorough spraying with Bordeaux mixture during the month preceding the maturity of the crop.

For stem-end rot the most important measure is the disinfection of the cut stems as they are being loaded into the cars.

PUBLIC HEALTH

By Wm. M. Jones, M. D.

Immunity (Continued)

Besides the natural immunity or natural resistance, there is a special kind of resistance or immunity that follows an attack of a particular disease. This is due to the fight between the human system and the germs that cause the disease. When a person recovers it is because his blood cells have been able to overcome the germs. In some cases this power of killing a particular germ is retained by the system for only a short time, and for others it continues for life. When away for a short time we speak of it as temporary immunity and when for life it is permanent immunity of the acquired force. We say acquired in distinction to hereditary.

We know that there are several diseases where the person can be made immune before hand or to keep their record after the disease begins. This is done by the use of certain substances we call vaccines and antitoxic sera.

This also produces immunity, which we call artificial immunity. Some diseases like diphtheria do not produce immunity by having the disease, but on the other hand make the person who has had it more liable to a second attack. It is found that science has done some of its best work. If it is necessary to immunize a person quickly or even cure him, we can do so by means of antitoxin sera, however, if there is no particular hurry we can use toxin anti-toxin, which will produce an immunity slowly, but which is more lasting and further we now have a test by which we can tell whether a person will take diphtheria or not. As a general proposition all children below 6 months of age are immune, they then lose their immunity and do not begin to regain it for five or six years, and continue to gain for ten or fifteen years. So we see the great per cent. of deaths from diphtheria occurs under six years of age.

Where an Automobile is concerned value lies in the MILEAGE you get from it.

There is no economy in small FIRST COST unless the cost of operation and maintenance is within the bounds of economy, too, nor is it economy to purchase a car which cannot give a maximum of mileage and still have a re-sale value.

Before you buy an Automobile it is always wise to look into these things and to decide on the basis of MILEAGE rather than on the basis of immediate cost.

The super-heated term.

At any rate Mathilde wasn't a June bride.

It's also difficult to keep natural history straight.

The weather isn't hot enough to thaw all frozen credits.

Members of the so-called smart set have their dull days.

Every summer has its dog days and every dog has its bark.

The importance of peace overtures sometimes is underestimated.

Someone is due to tell that fellow Litvinoff where he getsoff.

Hair net imports are increasing. Tell it to the bobbed hair brigade.

Politicians know that where there's a popular will there's a way.

Cosmetics are hardly to be numbered among the beautification projects.

Of course the Blair-Dover controversy is further evidence of normalcy.

The latest fad is vacationing in an airplane, but that comes too high for us.

Members of the light wines and beer contingent are still heavy hearted.

Between strikes and tariffs it is evidently going to be a mighty hot summer.

Sweet are the uses of adversity—except in the case of a high tariff on sugar.

Evidently the Ward case cannot be warded off the front page of New York papers.

Measures referred to as temporary expedients sometimes prove permanent liabilities.

People are beginning to learn something of the high cost of Republican tariff-making.

German factories are being operated on full time schedules—that is, the propaganda factories.

Political fences sometimes may be considered useful, but they can hardly be classed as ornamental.

Another case of Automobile vs. Train was settled at a grade crossing the other day, Automobile losing as usual.

Silas Slegem, who has been hearing much of normalcy under the Harding administration, says it's a theory and not a condition.

Seven elephants recently escaped from a circus and they were recaptured, but no one seems to know just where to locate the G. O. P. elephant in those days of mythical normalcy.

PLAIN WARNING

Clear warning is given the Republican party, the Republicans in Congress and the Republican administration that passage of the tariff bill will defeat them at the polls. The warning is sounded by a Republican, Senator La Follette, of Wisconsin.

He is right. An outraged public sentiment, hoodwinked, bamboozled, fed empty promises, will see that not twice in succession shall people be taxed for the benefit of the few, that privileges shall not be showered upon the rich at the expense of the poor, that the bloated shall not always swill themselves at the trough.

It is hard for reactionaries to learn anything. So late as the primaries in Pennsylvania, Indiana and Iowa are, the Republican high priests of protection have not learned anything from them. In those primaries the people spoke clearly and distinctly. "You have failed," was what the votes against the regular, high tariff Republicans said. "You have not kept your promises. You must go." Out they go, but those remaining go on their sweet way, refusing to listen to the great rumble of discontent spreading throughout even the thick Republican sections of the country.

It will take an earthquake to wake them up, but they will be waked. The fall elections will oust many from their accustomed places in the senate and the house. Perhaps as they rub their eyes they will recognize just what is the matter with them, but even then it is possible that they may not. It is mighty hard for them to get it in their heads that the people of the United States are the rulers, that the people are sovereign, not those few men of great wealth, striving for more, no matter what the methods of getting it, no matter how they reach their hands into the pockets of the toilers of the country.

Tariff means tax. The two are identical. Tariff is ostensibly a tax on goods entering this country, but it really operates as a tax upon the masses of the American people. A great deal of trouble is taken to disguise it, to sugar coat it and make it appear as something else, but a tax can not be disguised.

The people have had just about enough of that sort of tax. They are in no mood to pay toll to people whose businesses can not stand upon their own bottoms. They are tired of "guaranteeing" profits to concerns that say they can not live without reaching out and taking a tax from every person in the United States. Nobody guarantees them profit. They can starve for all the concern the tariff hogs give them and they see no reason why others should not be on the same footing with them.

It is a plain warning. But it has come too late. The Republican members of Congress and the Republican administration are too set in their ways to stop now.

Let it learn a big lesson at the polls.

MUST STEW A WHILE LONGER

The Russian problem has simmered down, it seems, to something like this: The Russians, in conference with some of the other nations at The Hague, want a big loan, an international loan. They have no security to offer because they do not recognize such things as property rights. They do not believe in anybody holding property. They will give no mortgages, no bonds. If they give bonds the chances are they would later repudiate them, as they have done other bonds of Russia. The chances are that they will get no loan, for nobody wants to lend without security. It's foolish to do so. The conclusion, then, is that Russia will just have to stew in her own juice until the Reds get a little sense in their heads.

The vice-chairman of the Railway Labor board is named Hanger, but it appears that he couldn't settle the strike if he were to be hanged for his failure to do so.

MUST BE SETTLED

The employers and operators of the coal mines might as well come to an agreement in regard to the present strike, for if they don't the government will eventually take charge and settle the disputes. A settlement by the government may not be as satisfactory to both sides as a settlement among themselves, because if the government does take the strike in charge it will be settled with three factors in view, the operators, the employers, and the public. In that case the entire country will be taken into consideration with partiality to no one group or faction, it may be assumed.

When the manufacturing industries and public utilities of the country begin to feel the need of coal then pressure will be brought to bear and should prove a great factor in the ending of the strike. In the present railroad strike, surely the government will not allow the transportation of the mails to be hindered, nor should the public interest be unduly jeopardized in the coal strike.

Another great factor in the settlement of the strike is the attitude of the people. Of course cold weather is not here, but the strike has lasted a number of weeks and the apparent determination of both sides makes it appear that it may last for many more months. Why shouldn't the people interfere? The coal mines are virtually public utilities. At any rate, the people will not sit idly by and see suffering when the coal is in the earth. Either a settlement will be forced or the mines taken over and placed in proper hands for operation.

Not only the employers and operators, but the government has played its part in the continuance of the deadlock. Secretary Hoover warned the country that the strike was coming long beforehand, but no steps were taken to prevent it. Officials in Washington sat by calmly without offering any suggestions as to means of averting a walkout.

Then, too, just as public opinion was inclined to be in favor of the strikers and their unions it was antagonized by the horrible massacres at Herrin, Ill. Such action on the part of the miners was wholly reprehensible and in no way aided in their cause.

In some way the deadlock must be broken and the strike settled, so why wait until stringent measures become necessary? The present coal conference at Washington is the proper place and there is no apparent reason for the standstill.

BUSINESS IMPROVEMENT

At the present time business appears to be in better condition than it has been for the past few months. Merchants and business men in general are rather optimistic concerning the trend of affairs as a whole. Astute observers believe that the future is exceptionally bright and that business is really becoming normal again.

The small consumer has more to spend. If he doesn't have money, then the economic structure of the whole country is affected. Of course there are certain classes of people who seldom feel the pressure of a financial or economic crisis in the country, but they are far in the minority. In this particular section now an exceptionally large amount of construction and other work is in progress. More money is in circulation—meaning more prosperity. The year 1919 is a good example of this. At that time wages were high, raw material was in demand, and everybody was buying and selling, thereby keeping the currency in circulation. It was a prosperous time.

That the better prices for farm products play an important part in present conditions is also true. There are three sources from which raw material comes, the farm, the mine, and the forest, and the reater part comes from the farm. This country is essentially dependent on agriculture. When the producer is receiving a good price for his products then the entire country profits.

MORTGAGE SALE OF LAND

Under and by virtue of the power conferred in a certain mortgage deed executed by C. O. Watson on the 5th day of August, 1921, to George W. Temples, and recorded in the Register of Deeds office of Guilford County in Book No. 368, page 128, etc., default having been made in the payment of money thereby secured, the undersigned will on Saturday, August 5, 1922, at 12 o'clock M., or soon thereafter, at the east door of the Courthouse in the City of Greensboro, N. C., offer for sale for cash to the last and highest bidder the following described land, lying in Morehead Township adjoining the land of J. W. Zink and others and bounded as follows:

Beginning at a stone on the west side of the public road leading from Red Hill Church to Greensboro, near Lithia branch and running North 85 1-2 degrees West 50 poles to a stone; thence North 3 degrees East 32 poles to a stone in Zink's line; thence South 87 degrees East 50 poles to a stone; thence South 3 degrees West 33 poles to the first station.

Containing 10 acres more or less. There is a swimming pool on the above described land.

RAINBOW'S END

By REX BEACH

SYNOPSIS

Dona Rosa, the wife of Don Esteban Varona, wealthy and aristocratic Cuban planter, dies in giving birth to twins, a boy and a girl. She was one of three possessors of the secret of a hiding place of a great store of gold and jewels concealed in a well, along with deeds to Varona's property, the other two being Varona and a giant negro slave of his, Sebastian. Pancho Cueto, Varona's plantations manager, strives to get the slave to disclose the hiding place, hinting that Varona will sell the negro's daughter, Evangelina, but the slave refuses, as he does when Dona Isabel, Havana beauty, who becomes Varona's second wife, makes the same effort. The latter tries to induce Varona to sell the slave girl.

When the twin children of Varona, Esteban and Rosa, were seven years old their father, while drunk at cards, lost their nurse, Evangelina, daughter of the slave Sebastian, in a wager to one of his guests. The next day Sebastian, remonstrating with his master about it, was tied to a grating, cruelly whipped, and left chained. Returning later in the day, Varona, with several guests, stopped and taunted the negro, who became insane, wrenching himself free from the grating and killing Varona and two of his companions and was himself shot and killed. With Varona and Sebastian went the secret of the hiding place of Varona's wealth in gold and jewels and the deeds to his large estates.

The twins live in moderate circumstances with their stepmother. When Rosa is still in her teens Don Mario de Castano, fat sugar merchant, old enough to be her father, asks her hand in marriage. Johnnie O'Reilly, a young American, who is in love with Rosa, visits her.

O'Reilly calls upon Rosa to say goodbye, the revolt of the Cubans being responsible for his company calling him back to New York. Esteban, Rosa's brother, is with the revolutionists. O'Reilly tells Rosa of his love for her. She promises to wait for him to return and get her.

Retribution

Although for a long time Dona Isabel had been sure in her own mind that Pancho Cueto, her administrator, was robbing her, she had never mustered courage to call him to a reckoning. And there was a reason for her cowardice. Nevertheless, De Castano's blunt accusation, coupled with her own urgent needs, served to fix her resolution, and on the day after the merchant's visit she sent for the overseer, who at the time was living on one of the plantations.

Cueto was plainly curious to learn why he had been sent for, but since he asked no questions, his employer was forced to open the subject herself. Several times he led up to it unsuccessfully; then she took the plunge. Through dry, white lips she began:

"My dear Pancho, times are hard. The plantations are failing, and so—Pancho Cueto's eyes were set close to his nose, his face was long and thin and harsh; he regarded the speaker with such a sinister, unblinking stare that she could scarcely finish: "—and so I can no longer afford to retain you as administrator."

"Times will improve," he said. "Impossible! This war threatens to bring utter ruin; and now that Esteban and Rosa are home they spend money like water. I groan with poverty."

"Yes, they are extravagant. It is the more reason for me to remain in your service."

"No, no! I tell you I'm bankrupt."

"So? Then the remedy is simple—sell a part of your land."

Although this suggestion came, naturally enough, Dona Isabel turned cold, and felt her smile stiffen into a grimace. She wondered if Cueto could be feeling her out deliberately. "Sell the Varona lands?" she queried, after a momentary struggle with herself. "Esteban would rise from his grave. No. It was his wish that the plantations go to his children intact."

"And his wish is sacred to you, eh?" Cueto nodded his approval, although his smile was disconcerting. "An admirable sentiment! It does you honor! But speaking of that subject, I am reminded of that dispute with Jose Oroz over the boundary to La Joya. He is a rascal, that Oroz; he would steal the sap out of your standing cane if he could. I have promised to show him the original deed to La Joya and to furnish him with the proofs about the boundary line. That would be better than a lawsuit, wouldn't it?"

"Decidedly! But—I will settle with him myself."

Cueto lifted an admonitory hand, his face alight with the faintest glimmer of ironic mirth. "I could not trust you to the mercies of that rascal," he said, piously. "No, I shall go on as I am, even at a sacrifice to myself. I love Don Esteban's children as my very own; and you, senora—"

Isabel knew that she must win a complete victory at once or accept irretrievable defeat.

"Never!" she interrupted, with a tone of finality. "I can't accept your sacrifice. I am not worthy. Kindly arrange to turn over your books of account at once. I shall make you as handsome a present as my circumstances will permit in recognition of your long and faithful service."

Then Pancho Cueto did an unexpected thing: he laughed shortly and shook his head.

Dona Isabel was ready to faint and her voice quavered as she went on: "Understand me, we part the best of friends despite all I have heard against you. I do not believe these stories people tell, for you probably have enemies. Even if all they say were true I should force myself to be lenient because of your affection for my husband."

The man rose, still smiling. "It is I who have been lenient," said he. "Gladly. I have long suspected that Don Esteban hid the deeds of his property with the rest of his valuables, and now that you admit—"

Dona Isabel recoiled sharply. "Admit! Are you mad? Deeds! What are you talking about?" her eyes met his bravely enough, but she could feel her lips trembling loosely.

Casting aside all pretense, the overseer exclaimed: "Por el amor de Dios! An end to this! I know why you sent for me. You think I have been robbing you. Well, to be honest, so I have. Why should I tell as I do while you and those twins live here in luxury and idleness, squandering money to which you have no right?"

"Have I lost my reason?" gasped the widow. "No right?"

"At least no better right than I. Don't you understand? You have no title to those plantations! They are mine, for I have paid the taxes out of my own pockets now these many years."

"Taxes! What do you mean?"

"I paid them. The receipts are in my name."

"God! Such perfidy! And you who knew him!"

"The deeds have been lost for so long that the property would have reverted to the crown had it not been for me. You doubt that, eh? Well, appeal to the court and you will find that it is true. For that matter, the officials make new laws to fit each case, and should they learn that Esteban Varona died intestate they would arrange somehow to seize all his property and leave you without a roof over your head. Fortunately I can prevent that, for I have a title that will stand in want of a better one."

There was a momentary silence while the unhappy woman struggled with herself. Then:

"You took advantage of my ignorance of business to rob me," she declared. "Well, I know something about the government officials; if they would make a law to fit my case they will make one to fit yours. When I tell them what you have done perhaps you will not fare so well with them as you expect." She was fighting now with the desperation of one cornered.

"Perhaps," Cueto shrugged. "That is what I want to talk to you about, if only you will be sensible. Now then, let us be frank. Inasmuch as we're both in much the same fix, hadn't we better continue our present arrangements?" He stared unblinkingly at his listener. "Oh, I mean it. Is it not better for you to be content with what my generosity prompts me to give, rather than to risk ruin for both of us by grasping for too much?"

"Merciful God! The outrage! I warrant you have grown rich through your stealing." Isabel's voice had gone flat with consternation.

"Rich? Well, not exactly, but comfortably well off." Cueto actually smiled again. "No doubt my frankness is a shock to you. You are angry at my proposition, eh? Never mind. You will think better of it in time, if you are a sensible woman."

"What a fiend! Have you no sentiment?"

"Oh, senora! I am all sentiment. Don Esteban was my benefactor. I revere his memory, and I feel it my duty to see that his family does not want. That is why I have provided for you, and will continue to provide—in proper measure. But now, since at last we enjoy such confidential relations, let us have no more of these miserable suspicions of each other. Let us entirely forget this unpleasant misunderstanding and be the same good friends as before."

Having said this, Pancho Cueto stood silent a moment in polite expectancy; then receiving no intelligible reply he bowed low and left the room.

To the avaricious Dona Isabel Cueto's frank acknowledgement of theft was maddening and the realization that she was helpless, nay, dependent upon his charity for her living, fairly crucified her proud spirit.

All day she brooded, and by the time evening came she had worked herself into such a state of nerves that she could eat no dinner. Locking herself into her room, she paced the floor, now wringing her hands, now twisting in agony upon her bed, now biting her wrists in an endeavor to clear her head and to devise some means of outwitting this treacherous overseer. But mere thought of the law frightened her; the longer she pondered her situation the more she realized her own impotence. There was no doubt that the courts were corrupt; they were notoriously venal at best, and this war had made them worse. Graft was rampant everywhere. To confess publicly that Esteban Varona had left no heirs, no title to his property, would indeed be the sheerest folly. No, Cueto had her at his mercy.

Sometime during the course of the evening a wild idea came to Isabel. Knowing that the manager would spend the night beneath her roof, she planned to kill him. At first it seemed a simple thing to do—merely a matter of dagger or pistol, while he slept—but further thought revealed appalling risks and difficulties; and she decided to wait. Poison was far safer.

That night she lay awake a long time putting her scheme into final shape, and then for an interval that seemed longer she hung poised in those penumbral regions midway between wakefulness and slumber. Through her mind meanwhile there passed a whirling phantasmagoria, an interminable procession of figures, of memories, real yet unreal, convincing yet unconvincing. When she did at last lose all awareness of reality the effect was merely to enhance the vividness of those phantoms, to lend substance to her vaporous visions.

Constant brooding over the treasure had long since affected Dona Isabel's brain, and as a consequence she often dreamed about it. She dreamed about it again tonight, and, strangely enough, her dreams were pleasant. Sebastian appeared, but for once he neither cursed nor threatened her; and Esteban, when he came, was again the lover who had courted her in Habana. It was all very wonderful, very exciting, very real. Dona Isabel found herself robbed for him in her wedding-gown of white, and realized that she was beautiful. It seemed also as if her powers of attraction were magically enhanced, for she exercised a potent influence over him. Her senses were quickened a thousandfold, too. For instance, she could see great distances—a novel and agreeable sensation; she enjoyed strange, unsuspected perfumes; she heard the music of distant waterfalls and understood the whispered language of the breeze. It was amazing, delightful. Esteban and she were walking through the grounds of the quinta and he was telling her about his casks of Spanish sovereigns, about those boxes bound with iron, about the gold and silver ornaments of heavenly beauty and the pearls as large as plums. As he talked, Isabel felt herself grow hot and cold with anticipation; she experienced spasms of delight. She felt that she must dance, must run, must cast her arms aloft in ecstasy. Never had she experienced so keen an intoxication of joy as now, while Esteban was leading her toward the treasure and wooing her with youthful ardor.

Then of a sudden Isabel's whole dream-world dissolved. She awoke, or thought she did, at hearing her name shouted. But although she underwent the mental and the physical shock of being startled from slumber, although she felt the first swift fright of a person aroused to strange surroundings, she knew on the instant that she must still be asleep; for everything about her was dim and dark, the air was cold and damp, wet grass rose to her knees. It flashed through her mind that she had simply been whirled from a pleasant dream into one of terror. As she fought with herself to throw off the illusion of this nightmare its reality became overwhelming. Warring, incongruous sensations, far too swift for her mind to compass, were crowded into the minutest fraction of time. Before she could half realize her own condition she felt herself plunged into space. Now the sensation of falling was not strange to Isabel—it is common to all sufferers from nightmare—nevertheless, she experienced the dawn of a horror such as she had never guessed. She heard herself scream hoarsely, fearfully, and knew, too late, that she was indeed awake. Then—whirling chaos—A sudden, blinding crash of lights and sounds—Nothing more!

Esteban Varona sat until a late hour that night over a letter which required the utmost care in its composition. It was written upon the thinnest of paper, and when it was finished the writer inclosed it in an envelope of the same material. Esteban put the letter in his pocket without addressing it. Then he extinguished his light, tip-toed to the door connecting his and Rosa's rooms, and listened. No sound whatever came to his ears, for his sister slept like a kitten. Reassured, he strolled out into the hall. Here he paused a moment with his ear first to Pancho Cueto's door, and then to the door of his stepmother's room. He could hear the overseer's heavy breathing and Isabel's senseless babbling—the latter was moaning and muttering ceaselessly, but, being accustomed to her restlessness, Esteban paid no heed.

Letting himself out into the night, he took the path that led to the old sunken garden. Nocturnal birds were chirping; his way was barred with spider-webs, heavy with dew and gleaming in the moonlight like tiny ropes of jewels, the odor of gardenias was overpowering. He passed close by the well, and its gaping black mouth, only half protected by the broken coping, reminded him that he had promised Rosa to cover it with planks. In its present condition it was a menace to animals, if not to human beings who were unaware of its presence. He told himself he would attend to it on the morrow.

Seating himself on one of the old stone benches, the young man lit a cigarette and composed himself to wait. He sat there for a long time, grumbling inwardly, for the night was damp and he was sleepy; but at last a figure stole out of the gloom and joined him. The newcomer was a ragged negro, dressed in the fashion of the poorer country people.

"Well, Asensio, I thought you'd never come. I'll get a fever from this!" Esteban said, irritably.

"It is a long way, Don Esteban, and Evangelina made me wait until dark. I tell you we have to be careful these days."

"What is the news? What did you hear?"

Asensio sighed gratefully as he seated himself. "One hears a great deal, but one never knows what to believe. There is fighting in Santa Clara, and Maceo sweeps westward." Taking the unaddressed letter from his pocket, Esteban said, "I have another message for Colonel Lopez."

"That Lopez! He's here today and there tomorrow; one can never find him."

"Well, you must find him, and immediately, Asensio. This letter contains important news—so important, in fact"—Esteban laughed lightly—"that if you find yourself in danger from the Spaniards I'd advise you to chew it up and swallow it as quickly as you can."

"I'll remember that," said the negro, "for there's danger enough. Still I fear these Spaniards less than the guerrilleros; they are everywhere. They call themselves patriots, but they are nothing more than robbers. They—"

Asensio paused abruptly. He seized his companion by the arm and, leaning forward, stared across the level garden into the shadows opposite. Something was moving there, under the trees; the men could see that it was white and formless, and that it pursued an erratic course.

"What's that?" gasped the negro. He began to tremble violently and his breath became audible. Esteban was compelled to hold him down by main force. "Jesus Cristo! It's old Don Esteban, your father. They say he walks at midnight, carrying his head in his two hands."

Young Varona managed to whisper, with some show of courage: "Hush! Wait! I don't believe in ghosts." Nevertheless, he was on the point of setting Asensio an example of undignified flight when the mysterious object emerged from the shadows into the open moonlight; then he sighed with relief: "Ah-h! Now I see! It is my stepmother. She is asleep."

"Asleep?" Asensio was incredulous. He was still so unnerved by his first fright that Esteban dared not release him.

"Yes; her eyes are open, but she sees nothing."

"I don't like such things," the negro confessed in a shaky voice. "How can she walk if she is asleep? If her eyes are open, how can she help seeing us? You know she hates Evangelina and me."

"I tell you she sees nothing," Asensio said. "For a moment or two they watched the progress of the white-robed figure; then Esteban stirred and rose from his seat. 'She's too close to that well. There is—" He started forward a pace or two. "They say people who walk at night go mad if they're awakened too suddenly, and yet—"

Dona Isabel was talking in a low, throaty, unnatural tone. Her words were meaningless, but the effect, at that hour and in those surroundings, was bizarre and fearsome. Esteban felt his scalp prickling uncomfortably. This was very creepy.

When the somnambulist's deliberate progress toward the mouth of the well continued he called her name softly. "Dona Isabel!" Then he repeated it louder. "Dona Isabel! Wake up."

The woman seemed to hear and yet not to hear. She turned her head to listen, but continued to walk.

"Don't be alarmed," he said, reassuringly. "It is only Esteban—Dona Isabel! Stop." Esteban sprang forward, shouting at the top of his voice, for at the sound of her name Isabel had abruptly swerved to her right, a movement which brought her dangerously close to the lip of the well.

"Stop! Go back!" screamed the young man.

Above his warning there came a shriek, shrill and agonized—a wall of such abysmal terror as to shock the night birds and the insects into stillness. Dona Isabel slipped, or stumbled, to her knees, she balanced briefly, clutching at random while the earth and crumbling cement gave way beneath her; then she slid forward and disappeared, almost off from between Esteban's hands. There was a noisy rattle of rock and pebble and a great splash far below; a chuckle of little stones striking the water, then a faint bubbling. Nothing more. The stepson stood in his tracks, sick, blind with horror; he was swaying over the opening when Asensio dragged him back.

SHORT BUT SWEET

FINGERPRINT BOSS'S NOSE

Gone are the days when the old ranch smells of burning flesh as the boys stamp home the brand of "Circle X." No more will bossy have to submit to a painful week.

as an owner's brand of her hip heels. Because, it has been discovered that a cow's nose, like human finger tips, are no two alike. In the east, dairymen are inking bossy's nose—finger-printing her as shown in the picture—and filing the identification prints for any future needs.

Vanstory's Annual Clearance Sale of Spring Suits Starts Tomorrow Morning

Every year this event takes place, every year it is better than the year before, offering VALUES such as are seen only the once. This year we have taken our ENTIRE STOCK OF SPRING WOOLENS FOR MEN and FOR BOYS and have made a flat reduction of 25 per cent from the regular prices. In addition we have selected from this stock ONE HUNDRED SPRING SUITS FOR MEN which we offer at EXACTLY HALF PRICE. Since the men of Guilford county and the counties surrounding and the Mothers of this same territory have been watching for several weeks for this announcement, it is certain that the OPENING DAY OF OUR SALE will see a crowd who will leave as little as possible of the choicer offerings.

PRICES ARE REDUCED ONE-FOURTH ONE HUNDRED SUITS AT HALF PRICE

All Two - Piece Wool Suits for Boys Reduced One-Fourth

We do sell splendid suits for boys. Every mother in the country around and in the city will bear us out on that point. And when such suits are offered at ONE-FOURTH THEIR REGULAR PRICE then certainly there are values to be had which cannot be overlooked.

Norfolk Jackets, Knickerbocker Pants and all of them TWO-PANTS SUITS, TOO, good mixtures, serges, all well tailored and made by some of the most famous houses in the country.

The sizes range throughout and so is the selection of colors.

Odd Wool Pants for Men and Boys Reduced One-Fourth

Wool pants for men and boys, odds from which to choose that extra pair always so necessary to the wardrobe. These are all good pants, VANSTORY QUALITY or they would not be on our shelves, they are all wool, well tailored and afford a range of selection in materials, colors and patterns not often found at such reductions as these. Especially for the boys, there are knickerbockers of unusual quality, sturdy, wearable and representing values mothers seldom see. There is always room for another pair of pants in the boy's wardrobe and here is OPPORTUNITY beckoning to you.

Gabardine Rain Coats for Men Reduced One-Fourth

Gabardine Raincoats, the smartest to be seen, belted models finely tailored from a very high grade gabardine. They are not only good raincoats, but you will find them comfortable in the early fall when the evenings demand a light coat. These are here in practically all sizes for your choosing and are included in the REDUCTIONS FOR CLEARANCE. We do not believe you have ever had the opportunity for purchasing so good a raincoat for so little money. Partially lined, smartly styled, these GABARDINE RAINCOATS have proven one of the most popular numbers we have ever had in the store.

One Hundred Wool Suits for Men at Half Price

This ONE HUNDRED SUITS AT HALF PRICE will afford one hundred men, perhaps less, the opportunity to get ahead in the matter of clothes. A man has to be talked to a lot before he'll buy a suit anyhow, but now, with the chance to save HALF THE PRICE a lot of them are coming to the front and coming early. We always like to make this particular offering as attractive as possible, it has been a feature of our sales for years and this year we have really done ourselves proud in getting up a lot of suits you will be glad to purchase.

No Merchandise Charged During Sale

During this sale it will be impossible for us to send anything out on approval, nor will we be able to charge anything. In the matter of alterations it will be necessary to charge the exact cost of the alteration to you. But remember this, anything you purchase during this sale which does not prove satisfactory will be cheerfully taken back. This does not mean that goods can be exchanged, except for stated cause, nor can refunds be made except in cases of dissatisfaction.
