

FACTORY MOVE IS ANNOUNCED

To Make Picker Sticks At Pleasant Garden

BIG BUILDING LEASED

Southern Picker Stick Company, $50,000 Concern, To Begin Operations In New Plant About August 1

Pleasant Garden has been selected as the home of the Southern Picker Stick company, which is now located in High Point, but which will begin manufacturing operations in Pleasant Garden on or about August 1, with capital of $50,000.

Arrangements for removal of the business from High Point to Pleasant Garden already have been set in motion and the actual removal of the machinery and other equipment is scheduled for next week.

Officials of the company have secured a long-term lease on the two-story structure now occupied by the Buffalo Broom Works, which will move into one section of the Pleasant Garden school building. Constant construction of a larger and more modern school building is now in progress and it is indicated that upon its completion the Buffalo Broom Works may occupy the entire structure.

The building which will serve as the home of the Southern Picker Stick company is 50 by 150 feet with two floors. Within a few feet of the building is a sidetrack of the C. F. and Y. V. railroad. Excellent transportation facilities and easy accessibility to raw materials afforded at Pleasant Garden proved important factors in the decision of officials of the company to move their manufacturing enterprise to that town. A lease of the building for one year has been obtained with privilege of renewal for five years.

John E. White is president of the corporation. G. H. King is vice-president and E. H. Ferris has been elected secretary-treasurer. The services of E. A. Moffitt, of Pleasant Garden, have been secured as superintendent of the factory.

Already a splendid business has been built up by this company, it is stated. In fact, the company has outgrown its High Point quarters. Picker sticks made by this organization are sold to various cotton mills in North Carolina and other states; there appears to be almost no limit to the demand for such products. At High Point, it is understood, the company has been turning out about 1,500 picker sticks a day, but advice received here indicate that soon the daily output may be raised to 4,000 picker sticks.

The country around Pleasant Garden is noted for its fine hickory timber—the material from which the picker sticks are made—and officials of the company realize that condition should contribute materially to the success of the enterprise. Plenty of help can be secured, too, it is said. Judging from available information, it appears probable that the force will be augmented by the acquisition of workers from the Pleasant Garden section. This matter, however, has not yet been definitely determined.

Naturally the people of Pleasant Garden are gratified because of this concrete evidence of that town's strategic position as a manufacturing base. The new industry will be one of the most important in that section of Guilford county.

Industry begets industry, it is pointed out, and careful observers would not be surprised to witness the unfolding of other plans for continued ambitious development of Pleasant Garden as a manufacturing center. Situated in a fine agricultural section, with its increasing importance in the sphere of manufacturing, Pleasant Garden may reasonably be expected to become one of the most prosperous communities in North Carolina.

Efforts By Labor Board Have Ceased

Chicago, July 19.—Failure of all efforts to bring about the settlement of the country-wide strike of the railway shopmen was announced in a statement issued tonight by Ben W. Hooper, chairman of the United States Railroad Labor board.

"As there does not seem to be any probability of reconciling the antipathetic views of the carriers and the men on the question at issue, the labor board members are now engaged in further efforts along that line," the statement said.

At the same time the statement pointed out that virtual agreement had been reached between the rail heads and the strike leaders on all of the five points in dispute except that of the return to the strikers of their seniority rights—a question which was not originally in dispute between the roads and their men.

ROUTE OF ROAD NOT DECIDED

Highway Board Meets With Commissioners

DECIDE BY AUGUST 7

Mr. Cox States That Change In Randeman Road Will Save Much. County To Fix Pleasant Garden Road

At a joint meeting of the Guilford Board of Commissioners and the County Highway commission held Monday afternoon there was much discussion of the Pleasant Garden road, and the Greensboro-Randeman road situation was explained by J. Elwood Cox, state highway commissioner of the fifth district.

It was stated by W. C. Boren, chairman of the Guilford Highway commission, that engineers would start this week surveying the Pleasant Garden road, but final decision as to the exact route and whether it will be hard surfaced depends on Mr. Cox's decision as to the Randeman road.

Mr. Cox stated that it will be August 7 before he can make public his decision as to the Randeman road. He pointed out that if the state decides to leave the present Randeman road at Stinson's store, re-entering it at Otwell's store, $25,000 would be saved and 25 curves eliminated; moreover that as many people will be served on this stretch as would be served on the present line. He says that the county will keep the present line in good condition if the new one is adopted.

If the state adopts the proposed route for the Randeman road it is thought that the county will run a spur from a point about a mile and a half north of Pleasant Garden entering the Randeman road at a point south of Stinson's store. R. W. H. Stone stated that although much might be saved by the state and county by adopting the new route, yet he wanted the county and state to take the agricultural interests of the people into consideration before arriving at a definite decision.

At a meeting of the citizens of South Morehead, Sumner and Fentress townships held Friday night in the Rocky Knoll schoolhouse the following resolutions were adopted:

"Be it resolved that it is the sense of this body of citizens that the plan regarding building state highways will be more nearly conformed with by following as nearly as possible the original road bed, already designated and used by the state highway, leaving Greensboro by either of the following routes would be satisfactory: First, directly from the courthouse out Ashe street, or second, out South Elm street, leaving South Elm at a point near O'Connor's greenhouse and entering the Ashe street road near Short brothers store. However, the body would be opposed to following South Elm street farther than where the present road turns towards Short's store.

"This body recommends the above routing for the following reasons: "1. This has been an established road for more than 100 years and the present road is the boundary line for practically all farms along this road.

"2. The route herein described is a natural water shed and much less grading would be required and fewer bridges would be necessary.

"3. Any change from this route would seriously interfere with the plans of the board of education to establish a consolidated school in Sumner township.

"4. To leave the present route as surveyed from W. L. Stevenson's store to where it re-enters the old road at Otwell's place would leave 43 families off the present road, three churches, three stores, five important roads leading into the present road from the west side.

"5. To leave the present route would interfere seriously with R. F. D. route No. 1, which is one of the heaviest mail routes out of Greensboro.

"Be it further resolved that the county commissioners keep their sacred promise to the late W. C. Tucker and build without further delay a hard surface road from Greensboro to Pleasant Garden, following in general the present road

GOVERNOR MORRISON TAKES ISSUE WITH PRESIDENT HARDING REGARDING USE OF FEDERAL AUTHORITY IN COAL STRIKE

Raleigh, July 20.—Flatly refusing to comply with President Harding's telegraphed request that he join with the nation's chief magistrate and the governors of 27 other states in an invitation to striking coal miners to return to work, Governor Morrison today wired the President that his "position is practically to use the power of the government against the strikers."

Continuing, Governor Morrison informed the President that "in the enforcement of police regulations, and the upholding of the law the strikers will naturally have confidence in the impartiality or confidence of soldiers or other agencies of force directed by a government which has taken a decided stand against them, however good the reasons for such a stand may be."

It also was pointed out by the governor that he knew of no strike troubles in the coal mining industry

The commissioners in session Tuesday refused to change their policy in regard to the operation of pool rooms in the county. The petition of two poolroom operators, whose requests for renewal of licenses had been denied at a previous meeting, asking that the matter be reconsidered, was refused by a three to two vote. Chairman J. A. Rankin, L. T. Barker and W. C. Jones voted against the poolrooms, and Capt. J. G. Foushee and D. L. Donnell voted to reconsider.

Application of licensees who applied for renewal of license were C. M. Webster, of White Oak, and J. M. Medlin, of McAdoo Heights. Members of the board stated that no evidence was given that the men have conducted anything other than orderly places and that in refusing renewals the question of the character of either of the two men was not raised.

Yesterday's decision was declared by members of the board to be final.

WHARTON REUNION LARGELY ATTENDED

Over 150 Descendants of Watson Wharton, Who Settled In Guilford In 1785, Take Part

Over 150 of the descendants in this state of Watson Wharton met Tuesday in a family reunion at Lakewood, the country home of Rev. S. M. Rankin, nine miles east of Greensboro, near McLeansville.

During the day the following were elected officers of the family organization: President, E. P. Wharton; vice-president, W. S. Wharton; secretary-treasurer, E. P. McLean. The officers together with the following will form the executive committee: W. P. Knight, Mrs. C. R. Wharton, and Rev. S. M. Rankin.

About midday a huge country picnic dinner was served in a grove on the grounds. Telegrams from all over the country were received and read to the crowd. The event proved most enjoyable.

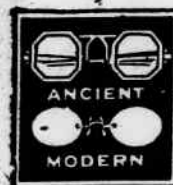

Several hundred of the descendants of Watson Wharton live in Guilford county. Many have moved away and at present one family is represented in 20 counties of the state and over half of the states of the union.

Watson Wharton came from the village of Wharton, England, in 1765, settling in Maryland, where he lived until 1785, when he moved to North Carolina, settling at North Buffalo, near McLeansville. His great-great-grandson, Walter S. Wharton, now lives on the old homestead.

It is planned to make the reunion an annual affair, the meeting next year to be held at the home of Walter S. Wharton, on the original homestead.

Convicted of Stealing Car Danville, Va., July 19.—C. A. Frasier, transfer car driver, was this evening convicted of stealing an automobile from Charlotte, N. C., and sentenced to serve six years in the penitentiary. The jury deliberated for just one hour.

AN INTRIGUE THAT FAILED

The International Sunday School Lesson,
By REV. E. P. BILLUPS,
Assistant Pastor West Market Street Methodist Church.

Daniel 6: 1-28
A Gullible King.—In the lesson this week we find Daniel serving under another king, Darius. Daniel had been made one of the three presidents of the kingdom; and we are told that "because an excellent spirit was in him the king sought to set him over the whole realm." The associates of Daniel, the other princes of the realm, became angry because of his preferment, and immediately set to work to destroy him if possible. The princes were jealous because Daniel had merited the favor of the king. And when that "green-eyed monster" is at work there is no end of harm and misunderstanding that is likely to result. Neither is there any limit to the intrigues of wicked men who are prompted by jealous motives. These men knew they would find no wrong with Daniel. He was a faithful official, and the surest thing about him was his devotion to God, whom he worshiped three times each day in his chamber. These men knew also the high regard Darius had for Daniel, and that he would not willingly give up so valuable a counsellor as Daniel. Hence these men contrived to trap the king and Daniel with one of the silliest devices that ever succeeded and failed. They persuaded the king to issue a decree to the effect that for a period of 30 days no one should ask anything of any god or man except the king. They tickled the vanity of the king no doubt by telling him of his popularity and proclaiming him even as a god. When a man's vanity is touched he will consent to almost anything, and in this case the king, being stupid and extremely gullible, "established the decree and signed the writing" and it became as law of the Medes and Persians.

An Open Window.—The conspirators laid their trap, and it remained only to spy on Daniel and catch him in the act of praying. The question is asked, why should Daniel fall in to a trap so easy to avoid? All he needed to do was to go along as usual, without protruding his religion upon the attention of the public, and he would foil his foes and save his life to his country and the world. But Daniel was not to be guided by the cowardly counsels of worldly prudence. No true servant will neglect his religious duties because of superficial conventionalities or the whims of disbelievers. Prudence is one of the cardinal virtues, and it is wise to possess this virtue; but to neglect one's prayer life because an embarrassing situation presents itself or through fear of criticism is not prudence. The key to Daniel's action is found in these words: "As he did aforetime." The king's decree had no effect upon him one way or the other. Prayer was a habit with Daniel, and it was just as natural for him to turn towards Jerusalem three times each day as it was to eat three times a day if that was the custom in those days. And a decree of the king to stop praying would have no more effect upon him than a decree of the pope would have upon us. Daniel's action was not in the spirit of bravado or ostentation, but in quiet confidence that he was doing his religious duty. Is not this a lesson for modern times? The best method for getting through a heavy day's work is to be a man of prayer. "Here is the house of our life, amid all the thousands of employments which may threaten to overwhelm us, here will ever be an open window which looks towards Jerusalem." Our windows which look toward Jerusalem are: prayer, obedience, Bible-reading, and Sabbath observance.

To the Lions.—The decree had been issued, Daniel had been caught praying, and despite all the regrets of the king he was unable to save Daniel from the torments to which his enemies would subject him. So to the lions he went. But to Daniel it was just another test of his faithfulness. Spurgeon said: "Well does one of the old writers call Daniel 'Coeur de Lion.' He had the heart of a lion, and into that cage he went a lion-like man." Every true Christian is like him in the presence of trial. Perhaps you have been told this very week that if you try to be honest in business, you will fail; you have been told that "business is business" and that it is not necessary to be truthful if you can gain an advantage by misrepresentation; you have been told that for all your fine scruples you are a root for your pains. George Beban, a moving picture producer, when he announced that he was going to produce clean pictures, was told by other producers that he would fail unless he made pictures whose stories were risqué. Beban produces clean and wholesome pictures; he has won the admiration of the public and the envy of other producers. Here are the lions waiting to eat you. And there are many who are thrown to the lions today because they do not conform to current fashion, as unalterable while it lasts as the law of the Medes and Persians. The writing is signed—it is all there in black and white. In all its details this ancient story is true to life.

The king spends a night in remorse while Daniel is with the lions. He finds that the scourge of conscience is far more terrible than the jeers of the mob. "The king arose very early in the morning, and went in haste to the den of lions." Greatly to his joy, he found that his seal had shut Daniel in, but it failed to keep the Lord out. God is ever mindful of His own, and He had delivered Daniel. And just as surely as Daniel was delivered, just so surely does God deliver us from all things that oppress. Faith always triumphs.

The Doom of Daniel's Foes.—The foes of Daniel, with their families, were thrown to the lions and were immediately devoured. The Hamans are usually hanged on the gallows they erect for Mordecais. The law of retribution runs through the Scripture and through history. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." This Persian law that called for the punishment of the offender's family was a cruel one, but even today we see how those nearest and dearest to a wicked man are involved in his fate.

FARM DEMONSTRATION

Description of Rot Diseases in Corn

The diseases herein described may attack the plant at any stage of its development from the seedling stage to maturity. They produce certain fairly well marked effects (symptoms) that may be recognized in the different stages of the growth of the plant. For convenience, the development period of the plant is divided into four parts, namely, the seedling stage, the young plant stage, the silk-and-tassel stage, and the ear stage.

Symptoms Shown in Seedling Stage

When kernels of corn which are affected by the rot organisms are planted, the conditions in the soil which favor the germination of the seed and the growth of the young seedling also favor the growth and development of the organisms. These organisms may spread directly from the planted kernel into the tissues of the young seedling or through the soil to the growing roots.

Various symptoms may follow as the result of this early injury. The diseased kernels, roots and lower parts of the stalk become rotted and dark colored. The seedlings which are badly infected will die soon after germination. This manifestation of the disease is known as seedling blight and is the cause of poor stands in many fields.

Other seedlings which are only slightly affected often partly recover under favorable conditions for growth by pushing out new roots above the affected parts. Such plants may show considerable yellowing and remain stunted. They are handicapped during their early growth, and will not be so productive as those which are not affected. In some cases, the recovery from the seedling infection is so slow that the plants make very little progress during the entire growing season and produce low yields.

Symptoms in the Young-Plant Stage

When the corn is about knee-high, or a little higher, diseased fields usually show characteristics similar to fields on poor soils. Where low fertility and poor physical condition of the soil and the disease occur together the diseased condition is more severe. In diseased fields there is usually marked irregularity in the height of the plants. The diseased plants are stunted to varying degrees and frequently are spindling and off color. The lower leaves usually show considerable dying at the tips. The inside of the base of the stalk usually is discolored and more or less rotted. New roots may develop, but they push out rather high up.

Plants affected in any of these ways do not withstand poor growing conditions very well. Healthy plants in the same or surrounding fields grow faster and their dark-green color is a rather sharp contrast sometimes to the lighter green of the diseased plants. On hot days in dry weather the diseased plants show a tendency to wilt considerably before the normal plants do.

Canning Fruits and Berries in Glass and Tin

Canned Apples.—Late fall and winter apples, which are slightly acid, are best for canning. Apples shrink more in canning than most fruits, therefore they should be blanched for one minute before processing. Pack tightly in No. 3 cans, cover with syrup (14 ounces of sugar to one gallon of water) or syrup No. 3.

Exhaust No. 3 tin cans three minutes. Process 8 minutes.

When canning apples in glass, process quart jars 15 minutes. It is advisable to make mellow summer apples into apple sauce. Pour hot into quart jars and process 15 minutes.

Canned Pears.—The Bartlett pear is best for canning. Select ripe, sound, medium size fruit (cut in halves, or if large, in quarters). Remove all the hard portions around the seed and submerge in cold water to prevent discoloration.

Plunge the halves or quarters into boiling syrup and allow them to be cooked until they can be pierced with a straw, remove and pack closely into No. 3 can or quart jar. Cover with a boiling syrup made of three pounds and nine ounces of sugar and one gallon of water (Syrup No. 3).

Exhaust No. 3 can three minutes and process 20 to 30 minutes. Process quart jar 25 to 35 minutes.

If pears are to be packed for exhibit purposes, small pears should be cut in halves and layered as peaches. Larger pears may have a thick slice cut from each of the four sides. Hollow these slightly and pack in layers. The fruit remaining around the core can be ground and used in gingered pears.

Many complaints have come in regarding the hardness and lack of flavor in some pears. In every instance it was found that Keiffer pears not thoroughly ripe had been used and no pre-cooking was done. Keiffer pears are not recommended for canning, but a palatable product may be had if the fruit is allowed to ripen thoroughly and care is taken to pre-cook until it is tender. Both Keiffer and Pound pears are better made into preserves.

Canned Figs.—Peel six quarts of figs. Bring two quarts of No. 3 syrup to boiling point and add figs. Cook until saturated with sugar but not until fiber breaks down.

Place figs carefully in jars and fill with syrup.

Process quart jars 80 minutes.

Canned Cherries.—Cherries are usually canned without the seed and should always be put in glass jars. The acid is frequently so strong that it eats through tin; and even lacquered is not as satisfactory as glass. Be sure to notice that all cherries are sound at heart. Large wax cherries are often canned whole and are delicious. They should be blanched for one minute and then dropped into cold syrup when they will plumb before they are processed.

Pack seeded or whole cherries in jar to within one-fourth inch of top, fill jar with a syrup made of one gallon of water and three pounds and nine ounces of sugar. Process quart jars 30 minutes. Process pint jars 20 minutes.

PUBLIC HEALTH

By Wm. M. Jones, M. D.

Vaccination (Continued)

For a long time after Jenner made his discovery, no other vaccine was known except the one for smallpox.

The principle was not clearly understood, and it remained for Pasteur to lay the permanent foundation of the various vaccine treatments that we have today.

The work of Pasteur was in a way an accident. He was working on a disease of chickens, known as chicken cholera, and consequently was often away from his laboratory for some time. He was growing the germs that cause chicken cholera in his laboratory, and one time when he came back from an extended trip he found that the soup on which he had had germs growing had dried up. But he found that the germs were still alive, yet were so weakened that they would not cause the disease. He gave these weakened germs to some chickens, these chickens were made sick, but did not die with cholera. He afterwards found that he could not give the chickens, which had had the dried and weakened germs, cholera, i. e., after the chickens had been vaccinated by being given the dried and weakened germs, and were then put with chickens that had cholera and even fed strong cholera germs they did not have cholera.

ANSWERING A CORRESPONDENT

C. W. Garrett, of Route 2, Liberty, in a communication in another column on this page, states that the management of The Patriot "should be interested in the welfare of the farmer." The management of The Patriot is interested in the welfare of the farmer and the paper is conducted toward that end and it thinks that its readers will agree with it that it places the interest of the farmer first.

What got the man started was an editorial appearing in the issue of Monday, July 10, under the caption "Figures Rather Discouraging," regarding a farm census which shows the number of cattle and hogs in Guilford county in comparison with the acreage to be rather small. He says that "would lead one to believe that the present management of The Patriot is interested in the farmer for the purpose of inducing him to produce an abundance of food in order that the city people may secure all they need at an unreasonably low price."

That is not what one may be led to believe. A man can believe anything he wants to believe if he cares to do so and the complainant has that privilege. The purpose of the editorial in calling attention to the figures was to show that all the farmers of the county are not producing their own food and to try in some way to induce them to do so and quit buying it from outside the state, paying high prices for it, high freight rates, making the people of the western states rich. Is that in the interest of the farmers? We think that it is.

There is not one line, not one word in the editorial referred to which asks that the farmers raise food in order that the people of the city may buy it cheaply. The attack in the communication, for it is an attack, is uncalled for and wholly gratuitous, practically an insult, for no such charge could be made without an iota of fact to support it, as this was made, without being insulting. The "present management of The Patriot" resents it and will not allow it to go unanswered.

Does our citizen know that the governor of North Carolina thought the matter of the farmers no. "Living at home" such a serious one that he started and prosecuted a "live at home" campaign in which he was assisted by practically every newspaper in the state, none more enthusiastically than the weekly, semi-weekly and the farm papers, and by every farm demonstration agent and every home demonstration agent in the state? Does he know that every one of those urged the farmer to raise his own supplies, to raise more cattle, hogs, chickens, vegetables, etc? Does he know that many farm families do not have a cow and their children no milk?

Would the man have The Patriot tell the farmers to quit raising cattle and hogs and chickens and vegetables? Is that his idea of the way to help the farmer and show the proper interest in him?

He can not say that the present management of The Patriot is not with the farmers. The present management of The Patriot has given hundreds of dollars worth of space to the activities now in motion whose aim is the securing of better prices for the farmer, higher prices for his products. Will he deny that the present management of The Patriot has supported, in its news columns and editorially, time and again, the co-operative marketing movement and has urged, all the time, the necessity of the farmers co-operating that they may get together for the purpose of securing higher prices for their products? That is exactly what The Patriot has done.

It has contributed its news space without stint, gladly, for the furtherance of the curb market here. It has supported it editorially, time and again. It conducts two departments, "Home Demonstration and Farm Demonstration," in each issue, solely for the benefit of the farmers and farmers' wives and children. In every instance it has worked for the benefit of the farmers.

Our critic makes a bad mistake. He states that he can give many instances where it does not pay the farmer to raise food, but it would be useless as you will never understand the farmer's condition until you try it from an actual dirt farmer's standpoint. Perhaps the present management of The Patriot does understand it from that standpoint. The present management was reared on the farm and worked there until nearly 21 years old and knows exactly what a dirt farmer has to contend with. Moreover, the present management of The Patriot noticed that where the farmers were prosperous they raised plenty of cattle, hogs, chickens, grain, vegetables and things to eat.

The present management of The Patriot is not interested in seeing the farmers produce a great deal of food in order that the people of the city may buy it cheaply. It is interested in the farmers producing sufficient food for their own use, so that they will not have to run to the feed stores for food for their stock and to the grocery store for food for themselves.

The present management of The Patriot is curious to know just what the correspondent would have farmers, who have no cows and who raise perhaps one hog do. Would he have them to quit raising that one hog?

It is a strange thing when the management of a newspaper is assailed because it tries to get the farmers to produce their own food, so that they will not have to enrich others. If that is against the interest of the farmer then every state Department of Agriculture, every farm agent and home demonstration agent, every farm newspaper in the United States, is assailed. That is exactly what they have all preached.

The Patriot leaves the question up to its readers whether it is a crime to recommend the raising of food on farms in sufficient quantities for support of the people and the livestock on the farms and whether the present management of The Patriot is with the farmer.

CANNOT CONDONE VIOLENCE

Will it be necessary for the governor of North Carolina to place troops in any railroad center with orders to declare martial law? So it seems from reports of disorder at Rocky Mount, where a score of Atlantic Coast Line guards were kidnapped by alleged strikers or sympathizers and taken from the town, some of them receiving injuries of such a nature as to necessitate medical aid. The situation has become so tense that special deputies have been sworn in and the authorities have asked the governor for troops.

There is no doubt but that the shopmen have a right to quit work in a body or as individuals. That is anyone's privilege, but no person can properly take the liberty of forcing an issue through violence to a citizen of the state and country. It matters not how righteous the cause may be nor how strong public sentiment may be for that particular cause if violence is done public sentiment will turn and the cause appear in a different light.

Every striker in North Carolina is a citizen of the state, should be proud of that fact and should not taint its name with disorders and bloodshed. It is natural that individuals and companies should wish to protect their property and it is only right that they should receive the protection of the state. At any cost the law must be upheld in the state.

Mit Younts and family have returned from a very pleasant cruise through Western North Carolina—News item in an exchange. And yet some people think there are no navigable streams over there.

The fight for control of the dye industry seems to be a life-and-death affair. "Never say die" appears to be the slogan of advocates and opponents of a dye embargo.

MOSTLY NONSENSE

By Gee Gee Dee.

MUCH HAS BEEN written recently of the activity of Alexandra, the queen mother, who in spite of her 77 years leads a fairly strenuous life. According to The London Cable, the mother of the English king "evidently is opposed to the idea of being laid on the shelf." That is quite natural. Her husband, the late Edward VII, was not by any means an inactive ruler, and she probably had to spend much time in governing him while he was governing the British empire, in so far as a king could govern it under a rather sharply limited monarchy. Alexandra then acquired the habit of governing, a habit, we suppose, that is not easily laid aside. Then when, following the death of Edward, George became king, the latter had a wife, Mary, to assist him in his governing activities—that is, in such governing activities as were left to him by Lloyd George.

Under such conditions Alexandra doubtless had to look for other things over which to exercise royal sway. We have an idea that she ordered a drastic reorganization of her staff of menservants and maidservants. Perhaps it was necessary to order some new velvet coats for the butlers; she may have found it advisable to change the styles of hairdressing of the ladies-in-waiting. We are not familiar with the prevailing customs in royal kitchens, but it is quite possible that Alexandra decided to install a new system of dish-washing and it may be that she developed some new thoughts in regard to chafing dishes. Should the stewards wear cream-colored ties on Tuesdays and Fridays? That's a nice question which the active old lady may have settled with her accustomed vigor.

Had she chosen to do so Alexandra might have obtained much assistance and advice from thousands of the subjects of her son. But perhaps she remembered how Queen Elizabeth, for example, ruled as she saw fit, without requisitioning a great deal of advice. And then from time to time modern exponents of royalty can find much opportunity for activity through regulation of family affairs. For instance, the venerable lady's granddaughter, Princess Mary, recently was having the time of her life getting married. Does Viscount Lascelles satisfy the queen mother's conceptions of an ideal grandson-in-law? Does he part his hair exactly in the right place? Was there ever a time when his trousers weren't properly creased? Many other questions largely similar might have been raised by Princess Mary's grandma, and the settlement of them all to her grandma's satisfaction, so nearly as humanly possible, should have afforded the old lady much enjoyment.

A labor dispute a day will not keep distress away.

CRITICISM OFFERED

Editor of The Patriot:
I have been a reader of The Patriot from the time that I was a small boy up to the present time. It has changed hands several times during that time, but it has always claimed to be primarily a farmer's paper. The management should be interested in the welfare of the farmer for the farmer keeps it going. If the farmer did not subscribe for and read your paper the business men would not advertise in it and you would have a dead Patriot. Such editorials as the one you published on Monday, July 10, (Figures Rather Discouraging), would lead one to believe that the present management of The Patriot is interested in the farmer for the purpose of inducing him to produce an abundance of food in order that the city people may secure all they need at an unreasonably low price. The figures you quote may be correct and may be discouraging from your standpoint, but the facts are more discouraging to the farmer than figures. There may be less than three cattle for every one hundred acres of land in Guilford county, but if there is a shortage of butter in Greensboro just go to any of the leading grocery stores and ask to see in the refrigerator. If that does not convince you just take 10 or 12 pounds and start out to sell it to the grocerymen.

Perhaps there are less than two hogs for each one hundred acres of land, but I know of a man who has a nice, fat three-hundred pounder. What will you give for him? He has been unable to sell him on the Greensboro market.
Does Guilford county need more cabbage, beans, beets, etc? Two or three weeks ago I went to at least half a dozen stores before I could sell a peck of snap beans and I then received 15 cents for them. The buyer stated that he was buying them just to accommodate me. Said he did not need them. I could name many instances, but it would be useless, as you will never understand the farmer's condition until you try it from an actual "dirt farmer's" standpoint.

Provide a market and pay a fair price and the Guilford farmers will produce enough food to supply Greensboro and have plenty left to ship away. Perhaps you have paid an unreasonably price for some apples or peaches in the past, but whose peaches were they? They were the fellow's down in Georgia who shipped them here before ours got ripe. If you must have products that are out of season here you must expect to pay high for them, but the high prices are gone when the Guilford produce gets to market.
If you wish to be of real service to the farmer—if you wish to help make the farmer more prosperous and thereby make yourself and Greensboro more prosperous—educate the Greensboro people to insist on Guilford county products when they go shopping and thus provide a market for the Guilford farmer's produce. When this is done the farmer will produce more.

Very truly yours,
C. W. GARRETT,
Route 2, Liberty, July 17, 1922.

The whole community is very much upset on the road subject, as there is some talk of changing the road, routing it by the Pinedale clubhouse. But people here feel that the highway commissioners will have better judgment than to take the road away from three churches, two schools, and the people who live along the highway, who have looked forward to having a hard surface road. The present route is only nine-tenths of a mile further, and the people think that it would be much cheaper to build nine-tenths of a mile along the present road than to build a road down by the clubhouse "through the wilderness and mountains."

WHITSETT

Protracted services will begin at Springwood Presbyterian church, Rev. G. L. Whiteley, pastor, next Sunday, July 23, and continue through the following week. The hours for service will be 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. The pastor will be assisted by visiting ministers.

HOSPITAL BOARD PRESENTS REPORT

County Commissioners Virtually Agree To Approve Board's Plans For Tuberculosis Sanatorium

At a special session of the county commissioners Monday although no definite decision was reached as to the action taken by the Guilford county tuberculosis sanatorium board in regard to the new county sanatorium, it was indicated that the hospital board's recommendations would be officially approved at the regular meeting in August.

Full report of the board's action was made by Chairman J. W. Cone. All of the $100,000 voted by the citizens of the county will be used in constructing the building, leaving none of that for the 100-odd acres of land upon which the sanatorium is to be built, or any funds for equipment.

The land, which is situated on the Greensboro-High Point road, a short distance east of the underpass, will cost approximately $20,000, which the commissioners agree to pay.

As to the equipment of the place it was intimated that Mr. Cone, J. Elwood Cox, who is a member of the board, and other men in the county would probably give freely to the cause. Approximately $25,000 will be required to equip the building properly, but the board is of the opinion that this sum will be raised without trouble.

SYNOPSIS

Dona Rosa, the wife of Don Esteban Varona, wealthy and aristocratic Cuban planter, dies in giving birth to twins, a boy and a girl. She was one of three possessors of the secret of a hiding place of a great store of gold and jewels concealed in a well, along with deeds to Varona's property, the other two being Varona and a giant negro slave of his, Sebastian. Pancho Cueto, Varona's plantation manager, strives to get the slave to disclose the hiding place, hinting that Varona will sell the negro's daughter, Evangelina, but the slave refuses, as he does when Dona Isabel, Havana beauty, who becomes Varona's second wife, makes the same effort. The latter tries to induce Varona to sell the slave girl.

When the twin children of Varona, Esteban and Rosa, were seven years old their father, while drunk at cards, lost their nurse, Evangelina, daughter of the slave Sebastian, in a wager to one of his guests. The next day Sebastian, remonstrating with his master about it, was tied to a grating, cruelly whipped, and left chained. Returning later in the day, Varona, with several guests, stopped and taunted the negro, who became insane, wrenching himself free from the grating and killing Varona and two of his companions and was himself shot and killed. With Varona and Sebastian went the secret of the hiding place of Varona's wealth in gold and jewels and the deeds to his large estates.

The twins live in moderate circumstances with their stepmother. When Rosa is still in her teens Don Mario de Castano, fat sugar merchant, old enough to be her father, asks her hand in marriage. Johnnie O'Reilly, a young American, who is in love with Rosa, visits her.

O'Reilly calls upon Rosa to say goodbye, the revolt of the Cubans being responsible for his company calling him back to New York. Esteban, Rosa's brother, is with the revolutionists. O'Reilly tells Rosa of his love for her. She promises to wait for him to return and get her.

Dona Isabel learns that Cueto suspects the deeds to the Varona plantations are in the hidden treasure and he plans to take the estates. While walking in her sleep, she falls in the old well.

The fall kills Dona Isabel. Cueto informs the authorities of Esteban's activities with the rebels. The twins flee to the cottage of Evangelina and her husband in the hills after Rosa refuses to marry de Castano.

A Cry From the Wilderness

New York seemed almost like a foreign city to Johnnie O'Reilly when he stepped out into it on the morning after his arrival. For one thing it was bleak and cold; the north wind, hailing direct from Baffin's Bay, had teeth, and it bit so cruelly that he was glad when he found shelter in the building which housed the offices of the Carter Importing company. The tropics had thinned O'Reilly's blood, for the Cuban winds bear a kiss instead of a sting; therefore he paused in the lower hallway, jostled by the morning crowds, and tried to warm himself. The truth is O'Reilly was not only cold, but frightened.

He was far from weak-hearted. In fact, few O'Reillys were that, and Johnnie had an ingrained self-assurance which might have been mistaken for impudence, but for the winning smile that went with it. Yet all the way from Havana he had seen in his mind's eye old Sam Carter intrenched behind his flat-topped desk, and that picture had more than once caused him to forget the carefully rehearsed speech in which he intended to resign his position as an employee and his prospects as a son-in-law.

That desk of Mr. Carter's was always bare and orderly, cleared for action, like the deck of a battleship, and over it many engagements had been fought, for the man behind it never shirked a conflict. He was a vigorous and irascible temperament, compounded of old-fashioned, slow-burning black powder and nitroglycerine—a combination of incalculable destructive power. It was a perilously unstable mixture, too; at times nothing less than a flame served to ignite it; on other occasions the office force pussy-footed past Carter's door on felt soles, and even then the slightest jar often caused the untoward thing to let go. In either event there was a deafening roar, much smoke, and a deal of damage. O'Reilly felt sure that whatever the condition of Mr. Carter's digestion or the serenity of his mind at the beginning of their interview, the news he had to impart would serve as an effective detonator, after which it would be every man for himself. It was not the effect of his report concerning the firm's unprofitable Cuban connections which O'Reilly feared would cause the decks to heave and the ship to rock—Samuel Carter could take calmly the most disturbing financial reverse—it was the blow to his pride at learning that anybody could prefer another girl to his daughter. Johnnie shook his shoulders and stamped his feet, but the chill in his bones refused to go.

He did gain courage, however, by thinking of Rosa Varona as he had last seen her, with arms outstretched, with eyes tear-filled, with yearning lips quivering at his going. The picture warmed him magically, and it was with a restored determination to make a clean breast of the matter and face the worst that he took the elevator.

The office force of the Carter Importing company looked up when the firm's Cuban representative entered the door, but its personnel having changed as the result of one of those periodical disruptions that occurred in the inner office, he was not recognized until he presented himself to Mr. Slack, Samuel Carter's private and intimidated secretary.

Mr. Slack smiled wanly, and extended a clammy, nerveless hand as cold and limber as a dead fish.

"You're expected," said he. "Mr. Carter is waiting to see you before leaving for California."

"Seeing me won't make his trip any pleasanter," O'Reilly said, somberly.

"We were afraid you wouldn't get out of Cuba; thought we might have to get the American consul at work."

"Really? I didn't know I was so important."

"Oh, you're the office pet, and well you know it," Mr. Slack's pleasantry was tinged with envy, for he had never been able to appreciate O'Reilly. "Conditions are bad, eh?"

"Yes. Anybody can leave," the other told him. "It's getting back that's difficult. The Spaniards don't like us, and I dare say they have good reason with all this talk of intervention and the secret help we're lending the Insurrectos. They held me up in Havana; tried to prove I was a spy. They were positively peeved when they failed. Snippy people, those Spaniards."

"Well, I'll tell Mr. Carter you're here." The secretary glided unobtrusively toward the private office, disappeared, glided softly into view again, and wagged a boneless forefinger invitingly. O'Reilly went to meet his employer as a man marches to execution.

His heart sank further at the welcome he received, for the importer gave him a veritable embrace; he patted him on the back and inquired three times as to his health. O'Reilly was anything but cold now; he was perspiring profusely, and he felt his collar growing limp. To shatter this old man's eager hopes would be like kicking a child in the face. Carter had never been so enthusiastic, so demonstrative; there was something almost theatrical in his greeting. It dismayed O'Reilly immensely to realize what a hold he must have upon his employer's affections. Although the latter had a reputation for self-control, he appeared to be in a perfect flutter now. He assumed a boisterousness which seemed strained and wholly out of keeping with the circumstances. His actions vaguely reminded the younger man of an ambling draft-horse trying to gallop; and when, for the fourth time, Mr. Carter inquired solicitously concerning his visitor's well-being, Johnnie's dismay turned to amazement. With a heavy playfulness Mr. Carter at length remarked:

"Well, my boy, you made a fizzle of it, didn't you? The tone was almost complimentary."

"Yes, sir, I'm a bright and shining failure," O'Reilly acknowledged, hopefully.

"Now don't 'yes, sir' me. We're friends, aren't we? Good! Understand, I don't blame you in the least—it's that idiotic revolution that spoiled our business. I can't understand those people. Lord! You did splendidly, under the circumstances."

"They have reason enough to revolt—oppression, tyranny, corruption," O'Reilly mumbled the familiar words in a numb paralysis at Mr. Carter's jovial familiarity.

"All Latin countries are corrupt," announced the importer—"always have been and always will be. They thrive under oppression. Politics is purely a business proposition with those people. However, I dare say this uprising won't last long."

O'Reilly welcomed this trend of the conversation; anything was better than fulsome praise, and the discussion would delay the coming crash. It seemed strange, however, that Samuel Carter should take time to discourse about generalities. Johnnie wondered why the old man didn't get down to cases.

"It's more than an uprising, sir," he said. "The rebels have overrun the eastern end of the island, and when I left Maceo and Gomez were sweeping west."

"Bah! It takes money to run a war."

"They have money," desperately argued O'Reilly. "Martí raised more than a million dollars, and every Cuban cigar-maker in the United States gives a part of his wages every week to the cause. The best blood of Cuba is in the fight. The rebels are poorly armed, but if our government recognizes their belligerency they'll soon fix that. Spain is about busted; she can't stand the strain."

"I predict they'll quit fighting as soon as they get hungry. The government is starving them out. However, they've wound up our affairs for the time being, and—" Mr. Carter carefully shifted the position of an ink-well, a calendar, and a paper-knife—"that brings us to a consideration of your and my affairs, doesn't it? Ahem! You remember our bargain? I was to give you a chance and you were to make good before you—er—planned any—er—matrimonial foolishness with my daughter."

"Yes, sir," O'Reilly felt that the moment had come for his carefully rehearsed speech, but, unhappily, he could not remember how the swansong started. He racked his brain for the opening words.

Mr. Carter, too, was unaccountably silent. He opened his lips, then closed them. Both men, after an awkward pause, cleared their throats in unison and eyed each other expectantly. Another moment dragged past, then they chorused:

"I have an unpleasant—"

Each broke off at the echo of his own words.

"What's that?" inquired the importer.

"Nothing. You were saying—"

"I was thinking how lucky it is that you and Elsa walked. Hm-m! Very fortunate." Again Mr. Carter rearranged his desk fittings. "She has deep feelings—got a conscience, too. Conscience is a fine thing in a woman—so few of 'em have it. We sometimes differ, Elsa and I, but when she sets her heart on a thing I see that she gets it, even if I think she oughtn't to have it. What's the use of having children if you can't spoil 'em, eh?" He looked up with a sort of resentful challenge, and when his listener appeared to agree with him he sighed with satisfaction. "Early marriages are silly—but she seems to think otherwise. Maybe she's right. Anyhow, she's licked me. I'm done. She wants to be married right away, before we go West. That's why I wanted to see you at once. You're a sensible fellow, Johnnie—no foolishness about you. You won't object, will you? We men have to take our medicine."

"It's quite out of the question," stammered the unhappy O'Reilly. "Come, come. It's tough on you, I know, but—" The fuse had begun to sputter. Johnnie had a horrified vision of himself being dragged unwillingly to the altar. "Elsa is going to have what she wants; if I have to break something. If you'll be sensible I'll stand behind you like a father and teach you the business. I'm getting old, and Ethelbert could never learn it. Otherwise—" The old man's jaw set; his eyes began to gleam angrily.

"Who is Ethelbert?" faintly inquired O'Reilly.

"Why, dammit! He's the fellow I've been telling you about. He's not so bad as he sounds; he's really a nice boy—"

"Elsa is in love with another man? Is that what you mean?" "Good Lord, yes! Don't you understand English? I didn't think you'd take it so hard—I was going to make a place for you here in the office, but of course it— Say! What the deuce ails you?"

Samuel Carter stared with amazement, for the injured victim of his daughter's fickleness had leaped to his feet and was shaking his hand vigorously, meanwhile uttering unintelligible sounds that seemed to signify relief, pleasure, delight—anything except what the old man expected.

"Are you crazy, or am I?" he inquired.

"Yes, sir; delirious. It's this way, sir; I've changed my mind, too."

"Oh—! You have?" "I've met the dearest, sweetest"—O'Reilly choked, then began again—"the dearest, loveliest—"

"Never mind the bird-calls—don't coo! I get enough of that at home. Don't tell me she's dearer and sweeter than Elsa. Another girl! Well, I'll be damned! Young man, you're a fool."

"Yes, sir."

Slightly mollified by this ready acknowledgement, Mr. Carter grunted with relief. "Humph! It turned out better than I thought. Why, I—I was positively terrified when you walked in. And to think you didn't need any sympathy!"

"I do need that job, though. It will enable me to get married."

"Nonsense! Better wait. I don't believe in early engagements."

"Oh yes, you do."

"Well, that depends. But, say—you're a pretty nifty youth to turn down my daughter and then hold me up for a job, all in the same breath. Here! Don't dance on my rug. I ought to be offended, and I am, but— Get out while I telephone Elsa, so she can dance, too."

O'Reilly spent that evening in writing a long letter to Rosa Varona. During the next few days his high spirits proved a trial and an affront to Mr. Slack, who, now that his employer had departed for the West, had assumed a subdued and gloomy dignity to match the somber responsibilities of his position.

Other letters went forward by succeeding posts, and there was no doubt now that O'Reilly's pen was tipped with magic! He tingled when he reread what he had written. He bade Rosa prepare for his return and their immediate marriage. The fun and the excitement of planning their future caused him to fill page after page with thrilling details of the flat-hunting, home-fitting excursions they would take upon their return to New York. He wrote her ecstatic descriptions of a suite of Grand Rapids furniture he had priced; he wasted a thousand emotional words over a set of china he had picked out, and the results of a preliminary trip into the apartment-house district required a convulsive three-part letter to relate. It is remarkable with what poetic fervor, what strength of feeling, a lover can describe a five-room flat; with what glories he can furnish it out of a modest salary and still leave enough for a life of luxury.

But O'Reilly's letters did not always touch upon practical things; there was a wide streak of romance in him, and much of what he wrote was the sort of thing which romantic lovers always write—tender, foolish, worshipful thoughts which half abashed him when he read them over. But that Rosa would thrill to them he had no doubt, nor had he any fear that she would hesitate to leave her native land for him. O'Reilly's love was unlimited; his trust in the girl was absolute. He knew, moreover, that she loved and trusted him. This, to be sure, was a miracle—a unique phenomenon which never ceased to amaze him. He did not dream that every man had felt the same vague wonder.

And so the time passed rapidly. But, strange to say, there came no answers to those letters. O'Reilly chafed; he cursed the revolution which had made communication so uncertain; at length he cabled, but still the days dragged on with no result. Gradually his impatience gave way to apprehension. Unreasonable conjectures besieged his mind and destroyed his peace.

PERSONAL MENTION

W. P. Fields, of Richmond, Va., is spending a week in Greensboro visiting his mother, Mrs. Kate Fields, and other relatives.

D. M. Glass, of Route 6, Greensboro, was a recent business visitor here.

P. T. Highfill, of Route 1, Summerfield, accompanied by his daughter, little Miss Velma Highfill, spent some time in Greensboro on business Tuesday. Incidentally, Mr. Highfill presented to the editor of The Patriot two of the finest apples ever seen in this—or any other—part of the country. One of the apples weighed 13 ounces and the other approximately 12 ounces. The huge and delectable specimens came from Mr. Highfill's fine orchards at his home.

R. M. Gladstone, of the Alamance section of Guilford County, was a visitor in the city Monday. Mr. Gladstone is convinced that Alamance is becoming one of the most progressive communities in the state.

J. T. Shoffner, of Route 1, Julian, was a recent business visitor in Greensboro.

John W. King, of this city, who has extensive farming interests in Guilford County, states that while in some parts of the county the tobacco crop prospect is not very bright, in others there are indications of a very good crop. Continued rains have been an adverse factor in a number of instances. In some sections may be found farmers who have already "laid by" their crops. On the other hand, some farmers have only recently finished planting corn.

J. A. Rankin, chairman of the Guilford County Board of Commissioners, left Wednesday morning for Hot Springs, Ark., to join Mrs. Rankin, who went there several weeks ago. They will return in about two weeks.

Capt. J. Giles Foushee, of the Guilford County Board of Commissioners, left Wednesday for a trip to Atlantic City, N. J. He will return in about 10 days.

Little improvement is noted in the condition of Sheriff D. B. Stafford, who for several days has been ill at his home on Arlington street.

Roxboro Banks Merge

Roxboro, July 19.—At a meeting of the two banks, the People's bank and the Bank of Roxboro, held in Roxboro July 15, their respective boards approved a proposition whereby the two banks would merge, subject to the final decision of the stockholders. The new organization will have a capital and surplus of $250,000, and total resources of $1,500,000.

THERE IS ONLY ONE KIND of service that counts where an automobile is concerned and that is the service which gives the MOST for the LEAST money. Because repairing an automobile is sort of like taking advantage of other people's misfortunes and unless you sympathize with them and try to do your best for them, you cannot give the utmost in worth while service. The Greensboro Motor Car Company has a hearty sympathy with the motorist who is unfortunate enough to break his car or to have something wrong with it. We do our best to give him his car back as good as new and we charge him just as little as we can for it, considering that the service we render is expert in every sense of the word and the material we use in repair the best to be had anywhere. Of course we are particularly expert on Buick Cars, but we do not have a great many of them to repair.
