

NEGROES MUST DIE IN CHAIR

Two Found Guilty of Criminal Assault

LEE GETS 12 YEARS

For Assaulting A. E. Ketchen He Draws Prison Sentence—Woman's Assaults To Die On September 15

Carthage, Aug. 15.—Jasper Thomas and Angus Murphy, negroes, must die in the electric chair at Raleigh on September 15 for their criminal assault on Mrs. A. E. Ketchen, of Miami, Fla., and for shooting her husband, sentence having been imposed here this afternoon in Moore county Superior court by Judge B. F. Long, while the other negro tried here, John Lee, convicted of assault on Mr. Ketchen, was ordered to serve 12 years in state prison.

The verdict of the jury declaring Thomas and Murphy guilty of criminal assault on Mrs. Ketchen, and Lee guilty of assaulting Mr. Ketchen, was returned at 4:40 this afternoon, following deliberations which extended over a period of seven minutes. Trial of the case was begun yesterday morning.

About 9 o'clock tonight the three prisoners in custody of Sheriff Blue and armed guards which included state militiamen, left for Raleigh on a special train.

On the stand Mrs. Ketchen positively identified Angus Murphy from his voice as the man who assaulted her. Both Murphy and Thomas denied any knowledge of the affair, declaring that they had bought the watch and pistol, found on their persons when arrested and identified as Mr. Ketchen's property, from two negroes whom Thomas knew in Florida. Thomas swore that the property was purchased at some station between Sanford and Aberdeen while the train on which he and Murphy were hobnobbing their way was waiting on a siding. Murphy testified that they bought the watch and pistol either at Vass or Cameron.

Captain Baucum, who was in charge of the freight train from which the negroes were taken, swore that the train made no stops between Sanford and Aberdeen. The conductor's testimony proved highly damaging to the negroes. Plaintiff Honeycutt also identified the negroes as the three who boarded the freight train at Southern Pines shortly after the assaults on the Ketchens.

John Lee identified Murphy as the assailant of Mrs. Ketchen and as the one who forced her to turn over to him the three negroes. He testified that Thomas held a flashlight while Murphy committed criminal assault upon Mrs. Ketchen. On the other hand, Mrs. Ketchen testified that Murphy held the flashlight while Thomas assaulted her.

The Ketchens were traveling through the country in their automobile and were spending the night in a tent near Southern Pines when the negroes shot Mr. Ketchen and attacked his wife. He was shot when he undertook to defend his wife. At one time it was feared that his wounds would prove fatal, but reports from the hospital indicate that he will recover. The Ketchens' 16-month-old baby was powder-burned from the shot which came so near killing Mr. Ketchen.

Dr. J. M. Milliken told of the condition of Mrs. Ketchen following the assault. She had scratches and bruises on the body and a heavy lump on the back of her head afforded evidence of her having been struck with the pistol. After criminally assaulting the woman the negroes made her give them money, Lee testified.

Murphy broke down when the verdict was announced, but Thomas appeared to be unemotional throughout the trial.

Members of the state militia, heavily armed, were stationed in Carthage while the case was being tried and they also accompanied the prisoners on the trip from Raleigh to Carthage, as well as on the return trip to the state prison. Hundreds of people attended the trial, but there was no disorder.

Edwards Reunion Is Enjoyed By Crowds

The reunion of the Edwards family was happily celebrated at the L. P. Edwards home, near Jamestown, last Sunday. Approximately 150 relatives and friends took part in the occasion.

In the morning members of the great assemblage exchanged interesting reminiscences and unfolded plans for the future. At noon picnic dinner of unusually large proportions, spread upon a big table, was served. With an abundance of good things to eat the dinner proved one of the most delightful features of the day.

Musical numbers were enjoyed in the afternoon. Mr. Kirkpatrick, of Greensboro, spoke interestingly of the accomplishments of the Edwards family and predicting continued success. Following the delivery it was generally agreed that such reunions in the future should be increasingly enjoyable events.

Visiting at Moore's Springs Mr. and Mrs. David Glass, of this city, started Wednesday morning for a two weeks' stay at Moore's Springs.

Oliver Speaks To Poultry Club Folk

Interesting ideas concerning poultry production, with special reference to the value of group effort in that sphere, were presented by Allen G. Oliver, of Raleigh, state poultry club agent, in an address Tuesday night at a meeting of the Guilford County Poultry Club association at the county courthouse.

The importance of work being done by representatives of poultry clubs in various sections of the state was emphasized by Mr. Oliver, who talked interestingly of methods of financing such projects.

No definite plans for the poultry show to be staged in Greensboro early next year were evolved, but it was indicated that the show would be an event of January, probably sometime during the first two weeks of that month.

Coal Strike About Over, Says Lewis

Cleveland, Ohio, Aug. 16.—Before leaving for Philadelphia tonight to take part in the anthracite negotiations there tomorrow John J. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, announced that additional agreements amounting to approximately 10,000,000 tons annually of soft coal production were executed here today in the settlement, in part, of the bituminous coal strike.

"Acceptance of the approximately 60,000,000 tons annual production represented in the conference of miners and operators yesterday and the execution of additional agreements today, involving something more than 10,000,000 production, gives the settlement impetus that will be irresistible," Mr. Lewis said in a statement today.

He predicted that a general acceptance of agreements by practically all operating units of the organized sections of the bituminous industry would be in effect in a short time.

CLAUDE SCHOOLFIELD GUILTY; GRAND JURY'S REPORT MADE

Convicted of Forgery, But Not Sentenced

Jury Finds That Claude Defrauded Bank of $10,000 With Forged Check on April 12—Claude Thanks Jury for Freedom

By the verdict of the Guilford Superior court jury returned yesterday afternoon, Claude Schoolfield was declared guilty of defrauding the American Exchange National bank of this city out of $10,000 with a forged check, while his brother, Clarence Schoolfield, was acquitted of the charge of forging the name of J. H. Cole, cashier of the Textile bank, White Oak, to the $10,000 check.

Sentence as to Claude Schoolfield probably will not be passed by Judge Harding until tomorrow. Trial of the Schoolfield brothers started Tuesday morning and the testimony was completed at 5 p. m. Tuesday. Following argument by counsel Judge Harding charged the jury, giving the 12 men the case about noon yesterday. The verdict was returned at 3 o'clock.

The jury's verdict evidently did not greatly disturb Claude Schoolfield, who was taken back to his cell in the county jail. Clarence showed emotion and thanked the jurors. Following four months spent in the county jail here he was obviously highly pleased to secure his freedom.

J. H. Cole testified that on April 12, the day of the $10,000 forgery, Claude Schoolfield had called at the Textile bank to pay the interest on a certain note. Shortly afterward, according to Mr. Cole, Clarence returned to the bank, asking to see Lloyd Amos.

The signature on the alleged forged check was the writing of Clarence Schoolfield, Cashier Cole testified.

E. M. Moser, teller at the American Exchange National bank, told of cashing the $10,000 check. He gave the money to Claude Schoolfield, following the receipt of a telephone call in which he had been informed that someone would call at the bank for the money to meet the Textile payroll.

R. E. Steele, wholesale grocer of this city, stated that he saw Claude Schoolfield in the American Exchange bank while Mr. Moser was making up the payroll.

Clarence Schoolfield testified that he knew nothing of the forgery. Claude Schoolfield on the stand denied any knowledge of the money. The only time he was in the American Exchange bank, he said, was on the day the bank opened. Several witnesses testified to the good character of the Schoolfield boys.

The maximum penalty for the crime of which Claude Schoolfield was convicted is a sentence of 20 years in the state prison.

ORGANIZED GROWERS VERY ENTHUSIASTIC

Another Delivery Day At Co-operative Points Provided—One Man Sends In 208 Contracts

Raleigh, Aug. 16.—Enthusiasm of the organized tobacco farmers has increased with every delivery day at the Tri-State Co-operative Tobacco Growers' association's delivery points in South Carolina.

In spite of heavy runs throughout the week, members of the association delivered between three and four million pounds of the bright leaf to the co-operative warehouses in the South Carolina belt during the first week of marketing.

So eager are the association members to carry their tobacco to the co-operative warehouses, that another day has been added to the weekly schedule of deliveries which will take place on Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Fridays, hereafter.

The success of co-operative marketing at its first trial in South Carolina, and last week's powerful drive through Eastern North Carolina, have brought in another regiment of new members to the co-operative ranks. Twelve hundred new contracts reached Raleigh headquarters last week and pushed the association across its goal of an 80,000 membership in the three states.

In spite of this fact, America's biggest co-operative will continue to welcome tobacco growers in Virginia and Western North Carolina until the markets of the old belt open.

A great mass meeting of tobacco farmers in Durham, with Oliver J. Sande, general manager of the association, as principal speaker, will begin the final campaign in Western North Carolina August 19.

R. J. Works and J. R. Blanks, members of the Burley pool from Kentucky, Dr. J. V. Joyner and Senator J. A. Brown, directors of the Tobacco Growers Co-operative association from North Carolina, and J. H. Quisenberry, district agent, Virginia, and leader of the successful sun-cured pool will hold 25 meetings in the west, beginning Monday at Aberdeen, Vass and Hillsboro.

As the advance guard of the avalanche of contracts which is coming from Eastern North Carolina where the farmers seized their last opportunity to sign, 20 contracts were sent in from Claude McGhee, of Franklin, in a single day.

KING KLEAGLE GIVEN BOUNCE

W. V. Guerard Proposer For Alleged Shortage

M'LWAIN NEW KING

Temporarily Acting As Receiver of K. K. Title of King Kleagle Alleged Shortage $200,000

Raleigh, Aug. 16.—W. V. Guerard, king kleagle of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan in North Carolina, has been deposed on order of Dr. W. E. Thompson, personal representative of the imperial wizard, for alleged shortage in his accounts.

A complete check of the kleagle's activities in North Carolina is in progress, according to Dr. Thompson, who states that Guerard will be sworn out in Franklin county this week, later in a number of counties, charging Guerard with embezzlement and obtaining money under false pretenses.

C. C. Melwaine, formerly of Texas, an ex-soldier, who holds the rifle championship of the United States army of occupation, is temporarily serving in the capacity of receiver, with the title of king kleagle, it is said.

All the forces of the propagation department of the klan with be withdrawn from North Carolina on August 23, according to Dr. Thompson and the order will be turned over to the North Carolina officers.

In the meantime the proposed action against Guerard has developed a counter fire, which may get into the courts as a civil action. It is understood that Guerard has employed counsel and will not only defend himself against the charges made, but also start action against the chiefs of the organization.

Total shortages in the accounts of Guerard are about $60,000, according to the statement of Dr. Thompson and include fees for new members which have never been reported, it is said. Dr. Thompson stated that Guerard claims that he was acting under the authority of the grand goblin.

It is charged that money that Guerard failed to remit to Atlanta headquarters to the klan amount to about $17,000, during that period extending from September 1, 1921, to January 1, 1922, when the klan was under attack from the New York World and other publications. It is charged that while the king kleagle was allowed $5 for every man taken into the klan, he failed to make any returns whatever to the Atlanta headquarters, claiming that necessary expenses in holding the klan together in North Carolina required all the funds.

Dr. Thompson charges that Guerard explains for this money in expense, in failure of kleagles serving under him to bring in money for new members, and that he charges against the alleged shortage a salary for himself in additional compensation of $3,000 as remuneration for the strain and anguish of the klan stress period.

Further irregularities charged against Guerard by Dr. Thompson include the furnishing of robes to klansmen, secured under his own contract from Winston-Salem, and Columbia, S. C., no returns for which were made to the Atlanta headquarters, it is alleged.

SHOULD SET EXAMPLE IN OBSERVING LAWS

Addressing Grand Jury Here, Judge Harding Tells of Influence Which May Be Thus Exerted

The law is the same for all classes, it is no respecter of persons, and it should be scrupulously observed by people everywhere, Judge W. F. Harding, of Charlotte, declared Monday in his opening of the grand jury at the opening of the one-week term of Guilford Superior court. Furthermore, the man above the average type should set an example in this connection worthy of emulation by the one below the average, according to the jurist.

Judge Harding evidently is inclined to the opinion that the manner of enforcement of the law is of secondary importance by comparison with the question of obedience to the law. Laws should be obeyed because they are on the statute books. Powerful sentiment along that line should be generated in the homes, Sunday schools and public schools, he said. The same law which prohibits crap shooting places a ban upon gambling by members of so-called fashionable clubs. All legal measures should be rigidly observed. The disposition in some quarters to regard lightly the assumption of oaths was deplored. Judge Harding told the members of the grand jury of their oath to present the names of all persons violating the criminal statutes and that they should make earnest inquiries into such matters.

The importance of the compulsory school attendance law was emphasized by the judge. Voters take an oath to support the constitution, he said, "How can we support the constitution, live under it, and get liquor?"

Members of the grand jury selected Monday to serve through the remaining Superior court term this year are C. A. Wharton, foreman; W. H. Tripp, A. M. Diviny, J. B. Gann, M. G. Bevil, E. L. Modlin, J. T. Bolton, W. E. Ballinger, Frank H. Ford, Andy Gordon, L. O. Grav, D. A. Jones, Lacy T. Wagoner, S. A. Coble, J. W. Paisley, D. O. Frazier, W. B. Weaver and W. E. Rumley.

THE SECRET OF LEADERSHIP

The International Sunday School Lesson,
By REV. E. P. BILLUPS,
Assistant Pastor West Market Street Methodist Church.

Esra 7-10 8:21-32

Esra, a True Leader. About the time that Queen Esther was saving the people, there was a Jewish lad, Esra, living in Babylon. By wise parents and devout teachers this lad was being trained in the lore of the Babylonians, but at the same time he was being grounded in the knowledge of God's word. In other words, Esra was receiving a religious education. And is not this a prime necessity in every age? There is need of education, though not without religion; for an education without religion shuts out the supreme part of a man's life—his soul.

It was natural for Esra to turn his eyes towards Jerusalem, and to study the needs of the people there. About the time the young scribe was ready to assume leadership of his people, there was a bad state of affairs in Jerusalem. About seventy years had passed since the dedication of the second temple, and a great change had come over the people. The soul visions of greatness and glory that had stirred their hearts on their pilgrimage to the holy city were fading; poverty and disappointment on the one hand, and interest in secular pursuits on the other, had quenched their zeal, faith had declined, and they were beginning to live on easy terms with pagans, taking wives from them and thus imperiling their very existence as a distinct nationality. Esra knows that unless Israel is turned again in the law of God, she is forever doomed. So he purposes in his heart "to teach in Israel statutes and judgments."

And can we not always find in these Old Testament passages lessons which are peculiarly applicable to us? We hear it iterated and reiterated by time-serving politicians and vociferous nationalists, that ours is a great nation, to which we all agree. But what has made our nation great? One word answers. Faith. But there are dangers which threaten. In our sins of "frivolity, godlessness, self-complacency, infatuation, and weakness" we are forgetting God and His leadership in the past. And we may prate of our so-called patriotism until our throats are as hoarse as our hearts are hollow; but for all time, the lightning of divine vengeance shall smite us unless we are called back by some modern Esra to "statutes and judgments."

At Ahava, Esra, ambitious to revive in the hearts of his people love for the law, gathers together a band of colonists and prepares them for the journey to Jerusalem. "Then I proclaimed a fast there, at the river of Ahava, that we might afflict ourselves before God, to seek of him a right way for us, and for our little ones, and for all our substance." The long journey ahead was fraught with many perils and would require strength and courage on the part of all, so "they fasted and sought God for this." They approached God in humility and did not go unrewarded. Humility is the one foundation for prevailing prayer. It must be the root-disposition of every prayer and every approach to God. The secret of Esra's greatness was his humility. It is the secret of all true greatness. Many imagine that pomp and pride and splurge and cleverness are the passports to greatness, but it is not so. He is the greatest among the sons of God who is the humble servant of all. If we are to build the Lord's Jerusalem among our contemporaries, we must meet at Ahava in humility before God.

After the prayer, at Ahava there yet remained one other thing before the departure. It was Esra's charge to the people. "Ye are holy unto the Lord; the vessels are holy also—watch ye, and keep them, until ye weigh them." Esra was possessed by the idea of "holiness unto the Lord." He believed in the sacredness of that which is devoted to God—whether it is man's heart, mind, time, or treasure. That presses home the question, Are we holy unto the Lord with respect to the treasures of the mind and heart? These pilgrims held consecrated wealth in their possession; so do we, but it is not of silver or gold; let us guard it with jealous care and preserve it for the final accounting at Jerusalem. Let Esra's exhortation ring in our ears, "A charge to keep I have
A God to glorify."

The Call For Leadership. Esra had prepared his heart to seek the law of the Lord. It was a great purpose and was destined to lead to a great end. The needs of the people called him to a place of responsible leadership. There are conditions today which challenge our most intelligent efforts. There is a need in every Sunday school for educated and consecrated teachers. In politics, there is need for sane leadership; a need for more far-visioned statesmen and fewer near-sighted politicians. Unsatisfactory industrial relations as they now exist, are for a large part, the result of radical and unintelligent leadership. In all fields we need leaders who are ashamed to ask for horsemen or soldiers or any other instruments of force and who are ready to rely upon moral appeal; we need leaders who, with all the strength of righteous convictions, are ready to call a halt on the laxness and immorality in manners and customs, social impurity, gambling, law violation, and other forms of existing corruption, and backed by the authority and prestige of the church, will lead men to righteous conduct. The vast, needy world is open to Esras.

(Editorial in Tri-State Tobacco Grower)

Every member of the Tobacco Growers Co-operative association should be a subscriber to his home newspaper. There is none more interested in the welfare of the farmer or more likely to do everything possible to enhance that welfare than the editor of your county paper, nor any one who has more loyally aided our association. The Tri-State Tobacco Grower will tell you each month what is going on in the Tobacco Growers' Co-operative association. Your county paper, however, will tell you every week what is going on in your association, in the county and the world. The information the farmer obtains from his local paper in a week is worth the cost for the whole year.

Subscribe for your county paper and keep your subscription paid up. You owe that much to your local civic pride, and you certainly owe it to your county editors, who have been your best friends.

FARM DEMONSTRATION

Horse manure has been considered the normal breeding medium for this pest. Investigations made during the outbreak in 1912 showed clearly, however, that the vast majority of the flies bred out in straw stacks, and investigations made around stables and barns indicate that while the fly breeds in pure horse manure it favors a mixture of this substance with straw. The fly was found to be breeding in much greater abundance in oat straw than in wheat straw. This appeared to be due to the softer stems and the greater amount of leaves in the oat straw, which furnished better food and allowed the stacks to become more compact. Rice straw was found to furnish suitable breeding conditions, and there is little doubt that barley and rye often serve as food for the immature stages.

It has been found by Prof. Iches to breed in Argentina in great numbers in the debris left after thrashing flax. A careful examination of portions of alfalfa stacks which were moist and readily accessible to numbers of flies showed that they were not infested, nor were accumulations of weeds and bunches of grass in open fields. The insect occasionally may breed in broken-up masses of hay or dead grass, especially when these are permeated with liquids from manure, and corn husks in feeding pens have been found to harbor the maggots.

The manure piles commonly found near stables where horses are kept furnish suitable breeding conditions. This is especially true in the early spring, when the warmth of the manure appears to be very attractive to the flies for egg laying. Cow-lot manure which has become broken up, especially when mixed with waste feed, is utilized as a breeding place and so is ensilage, particularly when mixed with straw, as is often the case when the bottom of a silo is cleaned out. Experimentally, a few specimens have been reared from pure cow manure, but this substance seems to be unattractive to the adult and not favorable for the breeding of the larvae on account of its very compact texture.

The stable fly has never been found breeding in human excrement and does not frequent malodorous places, which are so attractive to the house fly; hence it is much less likely to carry typhoid and other germs which may be found in such places.

This insect develops some what more slowly than the house fly, and it is therefore more essential, in order that it may breed successfully, that the eggs be deposited in rather large accumulations of material. The larvae are sensitive to drought and soon succumb if the material in which they are being developed is not kept rather moist.

Habits of the Adult. Both the male and female of this species feed on the blood of animals. They appear to discover their host mainly by sight and usually, especially on cattle, pass quickly to the lower portion of the legs, particularly on the outside, where the hair is somewhat shorter than on other parts of the animal and where they are less likely to be struck by the tail of the host. When the flies are very abundant their attack is by no means confined to the legs, as both cattle and horses have been seen practically covered with flies on all parts of the body. They seldom remain on the host long without inserting the beak. Before blood is extracted they are easily disturbed and often move about several times before settling down for final engorgement. After the beak is well inserted and the blood begins to flow they usually become engorged in from two to five minutes. The insertion of the beak is accompanied by a rather severe, sharp pain. This accounts for much of the worryment caused the host. After blood extraction has begun little or no pain is felt.

Drying Fruits

Apples.—The drying or evaporation of apples in recent years has become in a large measure a commercial proposition. Surplus fruit from the home orchard can be dried very satisfactorily at home in either the cook stove, portable or kiln type of evaporator. For home use almost any variety may be used, but the early varieties and sweet apples are not well adapted to drying, and do not make as high quality product as late varieties. Those varieties that possess good cooking qualities should be preferably used. White fleshed varieties like Ben Davis and Gano produce white stock, while the Limbertwig, Nickajack, Stayman, Winesap and Blacktwig varieties furnish golden stock. In this state more Limbertwig apples are dried than any other variety. A bushel of green fruit will produce from 4 to 7 pounds of dried product depending upon the variety. For the Limbertwig variety, generally used in the western part of the state, 5 1-2 to 6 pounds is a good average. The apples are first cleaned, if very dirty, then pared, cored, and either sliced, quartered or eighthed. Where fairly large quantities of material are handled, paring, coring and slicing machines should be provided. The fruit should be cut into eighths or rings rather than quarters, as not so much time is required in drying. The properly prepared fruit should be rapidly dropped for from two to five minutes in a weak brine solution made by boiling 2 ounces of salt with a gallon of water. Apples discolor rapidly if not treated with the brine solution. After removing from the brine bath the material should be drained and the surface moisture removed. In commercial practice most evaporator operators subject the material to sulphur fumes to bleach the fruit and preserve its bright appearance, but for home use, this is not necessary if the brine solution is used.

After the surface moisture has been removed, the prepared material is placed in shallow layers on the trays. If wire trays are used, it may prove advisable to line them with cheese cloth to prevent the fruit from coming in contact with the metal, for sometimes the acids in the fruit react with the metal causing a discoloration of the product. The fruit should be dried at a temperature beginning at 110 degrees F., and gradually being raised to not over 150 degrees F. It will require from 4 to 7 hours to properly dry the material, depending upon the size of the pieces and the care with which the heat is regulated.

For this climate a moisture content of from 22 per cent to 23 per cent is desired. The ability to judge accurately as to when the fruit has reached the proper stage of dryness comes only by experience. The fruit should have reached that degree of dryness that when a handful of the material is pressed together firmly the individual pieces will separate at once when released from the hand. There should be no piece or only an occasional piece that has any visible moisture on the surface. The material should be soft, leathery and pliable. A piece of average dryness should not show any free juice upon being cut and then squeezed, upon being cut and then squeezed, upon being cut and then squeezed, upon being cut and then squeezed.

When drying is finished, reduce the temperature of the material as rapidly as possible, because dried fruit slowly cooled often shrivels and becomes unattractive. Apples should be conditioned or cured after drying.

Roads Try to Limit Lower Freight Order

Raleigh, Aug. 16.—Following a delay of approximately two years, the North Carolina Traffic association recently received from the so-called Carolina committee, a body composed of the representatives of railroad defendants in the now well known North Carolina-Virginia rate case, a statement indicating rates the railroads desire to establish upon special commodity rates from points beginning at the Canadian line running through but not including Pittsburgh to the Virginia line, thence east, including all states.

The statement submitted to the North Carolina shippers' organization contains only eight commodities—canned goods, meats, lard, coffee, green and roasted, bagging, molasses and salt. On the last named article no change in rates is proposed, therefore only seven commodities are submitted by the defendant railroads.

Officers of the North Carolina Traffic association, while feeling that reductions on the seven commodities named are of benefit to the shippers and receivers of freight in North Carolina, are astounded at the limited application given to the order of the Interstate Commerce commission by the railroads, and shall insist upon the full measure of that order being literally carried out and complied with by the railroads.

KILLING A HOGGISH PROPOSAL

The fight in the United States senate to keep potash on the free lists instead of having to pay a duty for entrance into the United States was one carried on under the leadership of Senator Simmons, of North Carolina. It was waged against tremendous odds, in the shape of a Republican majority tariff hungry, avid, eager to levy tribute upon fertilizer, keen to soak farmers for the benefit of a few potash makers who sought to enrich themselves through such a gold mine.

It was a golden opportunity for those potash makers. They claim that they are unable to compete with foreign potash and for several years they have striven to build up sentiment for a high tariff on potash by means of insistent, continuous propaganda. They advanced all the tariff arguments, parroted for nearly 100 years, all the infant industry bunk, and good American working-men wages stuff.

A weaker man than Senator Simmons would have been dismayed at the prospect of such a contest, especially with regular Republicans in the senate so shamelessly putting everything possible under heavy levy, but he did not weaken. He showed convincingly the heavy, unjustifiable toll that would have been taken in the shape of increased fertilizer bills and it was a little too much for even the tariff hogs to stomach. They dared not impose that burden upon agriculture. In spite of their apparent indifference or blindness to the temper of the country against unjustifiable levies of that sort, the potash tax was a little too much.

The less hoggish of the tariff hogs knew that men like Senator Simmons would have informed the country of the heartlessness of such a tax, a procedure that would have legalized the picking of the pockets of farmers, and that the country would not have stood for such a thing. Enough of anything is enough and that would have been a little too much, even for the friends of special privileges.

The farmers of the country, all of them, not only those in the South, but everywhere fertilizer is used, owe a great deal to Senator Simmons for his steadfast guardianship of their interests in the matter.

MONEY EVERY MONTH

Under the caption, "The Business Hand of the Farmer," the Charlotte Observer gives some facts about a creamery at Mooresville. It shows that in one year at Mooresville there was paid out in money to the producers of butter fat $119,358.70, and a six per cent. dividend to 200 stockholders in the creamery, the money being distributed monthly over the twelve-month period. Further, "The checks thus distributed during a period of depression throughout the country have enabled the farmers who have cows to have money where in many instances there was no money to be had." The Observer winds up thus: "A pretty good condition of affairs, to be sure, but that is just the condition obtaining in all the creamery towns of the state."

Money when there wasn't much otherwise. Sent out to the people who had cows. The cows didn't know that there was a period of depression and where they were properly tended they kept right on producing money for their owners. The creamery has paid the people in the Mooresville section. It provides a ready, continuous, year-round market for their milk. Where is the crop that brings in money the year round?

The people who started the creamery at Mooresville did a great service for that section.

GETTING AN EXAMPLE

Judge Harding opening Superior court here, rightly pointed out in his charge to the grand jury that obedience to the law must spring from the men who are regarded as leaders in their communities or who are looked upon by others for an example. If such disregard it in any particular, he declared, others will think little of it, with little chance for general obedience unless the man who is regarded as above the average obey it in every particular.

The responsibility of those men is great. There may be laws to which they object, but that gives them no license to evade them and, by superior intelligence or cunning or whatever it may be called, dodging caught. That a law is on the statute books is sufficient for any man; it is his duty to obey it. As Judge Harding pointed out, laws are simply rules for behavior, necessary if there is to be any order and security, and disregard of them by the strong is if anything, more culpable than by the weak and the under-advantaged.

The law says this must not be done and that must not be done, but some men proceed to do those things craftily covering their steps. Yet those same men would become indignant should any one tax them directly with being "lawbreakers." They would, to put it mildly have a fit should any one say they are in the same class with the wretch who runs a still. Yet that is what Judge Harding said of such men. He regards violation of any law as violation of law, and he has more blame for the high-placed violator of the laws which inconvenience him and which he tries to get around than for the lowly fellow who breaks the law and takes his chances of going to the chafing.

As he showed in his charge unless the men who are looked upon by others as proper persons to set an example give themselves to strict observance of the laws there will be wide disregard of law by many others who are not bothered by such things as setting an example for anybody.

MUST HELP THEMSELVES

The war debts of the allied nations cause them a great deal of trouble. They are worrying about them. There continue to come hints that the United States might or should cancel her claims.

It is doubtful if there will come any money from across the Atlantic in payment of those debts for some time, but the people of the United States do not take kindly to the suggestion that they cancel their claims. They look over and see large armies still being maintained over there, with the neighbors quarreling among themselves and they see no reason why they should cancel the debts simply to allow Europe to have more to spend on armament. It looks foolish. It would be foolish.

It's all right to help people in every way possible, but as has been pointed out, people should help themselves a little. The best thing that Europe can do is to loose a large number of her soldiers, putting them back to work, where they can produce something, not merely eat up what others produce.

Every little strike movement has a meaning all its own, but sometimes it is exceedingly difficult to discover.

Of course if the strikers should succeed in stopping railroad traffic there wouldn't be any trains for the bandits to hold up.

Madame Walska, who married Harold F. McCormick the other day, says she will not let matrimony interfere with her operatic career. As this is her fourth marriage, we are inclined to the opinion that she does not let opera interfere with her matrimonial career.

Sometimes a public utility gives an exhibition of public utility.

MOSTLY NONSENSE

By Gee Gee Dee.

HISTORIANS OF THE FUTURE doubtless will have a merry time in their efforts to analyze the Republican tariff of 1922. Of course it may all appear quite simple to Senators Lodge and Smoot. When a man has one great ambition which he is determined to satisfy, all things related to the fulfillment of that ambition perhaps appear simple. Now, Senator Lodge once was known as the man whose chief object in life was to defeat the world peace plans of Woodrow Wilson, but in more recent months he has cherished an ambition which has appeared to be even dearer to his heart than his anti-league of nations ideas. In fact, the senator from Massachusetts about-faced so extensively on the idea of world peace that he cannot claim much distinction in that sphere except as an about-facer. For a long time the doctrine of a league of nations appeared terrible in the eyes of Mr. Lodge, but subsequently when he had been placed on the American delegation to the disarmament conference his perspective changed abruptly.

But tariff-making afforded the senator an opportunity to show the world what a consistent old boy he was. At first the highly intellectual senator must have been rather discouraged as he contemplated such sordid things as import duties on sugar and wool, but finally he came to the conclusion that there was a fine opportunity to demonstrate that lofty statesmanship can properly concern itself with such matters. The high tariff idea appealed mightily to Mr. Lodge. In collaboration with Mr. Smoot and other apostles of protection of the sky's-the-limit variety he effectively advanced that doctrine.

But there came a day when Senator Lodge's constituents became deeply concerned over some of his tariff-making efforts, especially his attitude toward a tariff on hides. With that peculiar, and what to some self-denying public servants must appear irritating, directness that characterizes the people's desire to let their wants be known in the political firmament, shoe manufacturers and other business men in the Bay state let Mr. Lodge know that unless he succeeded in having hides placed on the free list his senatorial days were numbered. It must have been rather discouraging for the inveterate advocate of high protective tariffs to contemplate himself in the role of free trader, but could he turn a deaf ear to those wealthy and influential constituents? Well, not by a blamed sight, so long as those w. and i. constituents were talking of turning him out of the senate. For a while, then, abstract principles seemed to belong to the realm of forgotten and unmourned things, so far as Henry Cabot Lodge was concerned, and his paramount concern was with the more concrete idea of repairing his political fences so as to enable him to return to the senate for another term.

Hides were placed on the free list and another ambition of Mr. Lodge seemed to be gratified. The word seemed to be employed advisedly. The voters will have an opportunity of declaring themselves upon that point next November and they often have a way of upsetting the fondest calculations of so-called statesmen.

Senator Smoot has been busy trying to administer to the country a sugar-coated pill in the shape of a skyrocket tariff on Cuban sugar. He appears to have succeeded quite well, and with many constituents vitally interested in the beet sugar industry he may fare quite well at the polls; he may or he may not. At any rate, he and some of his Republican colleagues may reason as to what an insignificant thing is tariff oppression by comparison with the question of exalted statesmen being returned to their places of dignity and power and trust and profit.

A NOTABLE TEACHER

The following article appeared last Monday in the Greensboro Daily News:

Report has just reached Greensboro of the death last week of Mrs. Fannie Reitzel, one of the most notable teachers of central North Carolina, at the home of her father, the old Coble homestead in south Alamance.

Mrs. Reitzel had taught continually for more than 30 years in the schools of south Alamance and east Guilford, and most of the young people of those sections have been in her classes.

Left a widow when barely 20 years old, she attended the state normal college when Melver and Claxton were waking the people of the state to the important duty of educating their young women and, through them, the children of the state. She caught the enthusiasm of those pioneers and retained it throughout her years of work, feeling that those men and their students had been consecrated to a great work in the uplift of the state.

At first she taught in the small country schools of one-teacher size but later she became the principal of a number of graded schools. For several years she has devoted herself to the primary grades, in which work she made herself a specialist. She constantly sought new and improved methods of teaching.

Her teaching was characterized by an appeal to the intellect and imagination of the child. In every community in which she taught she made herself an influence for its intellectual and moral betterment. Beginning her work at a time when there was prejudice against the employment of women as teachers, she stressed the duty of the women to exert their good influence upon public affairs, leaving the recognition of their rights to come as a result of public service.

In the summer of 1921 she attended the summer school of North Carolina college to meet the acquaintances of her former student days and to obtain new thought to carry back to her school work in the rural communities. In recognition of her long and efficient service she was recently granted by the state a teacher's life certificate for the public schools.

She was a sister of the late Judge Albert L. Coble, of Statesville, and a daughter of Wesley L. and Barbara Gresson Coble, of South Alamance. Her husband was Henry A. Reitzel. She is survived by her brother, John W. Coble, of South Alamance, a daughter, Mrs. W. H. Bennett, of South Guilford, and a son, Albert Emmet Reitzel, a lawyer, of Washington, D. C.

RAINBOW'S END

Synopsis

The wife of Don Esteban Varona, rich Spanish planter in Cuba, dies giving birth to twins, Esteban, Jr., and Rosa. Shortly after Varona's second marriage the secret hiding place in an old well of his great store of gold, jewels and deeds to land passes when he is killed by his favorite slave, Sebastian, crazed by cruel treatment after Varona lost Evangelina, Sebastian's daughter, the twins' nurse, at cards, Sebastian is shot. Varona's second wife, hunting the treasure, is killed by falling in the well. Pancho Cueto, plantation overseer, informs the authorities young Varona is involved in the Cuban insurrection. The twins, now grown, flee to the hut in the hills of Evangelina and her husband, Asensio, now freed. Johnnie O'Reilly, American, Rosa's fiancé, is called back to New York by his company and for some time can hear nothing from her.

O'Reilly finally receives a letter from Rosa relating her wretched life as a refugee.

O'Reilly goes to Cuba in search of Rosa.

O'Reilly starts his search of Rosa. He is watched as a spy.

Esteban and his band attack Cueto. Cueto has planned with Cubo, a leader of Spanish troops, to kill Esteban and capture Rosa.

While Esteban burns Cueto's cane Cobo, brutal Spanish captain, with Cueto attacks the home of Asensio. Esteban rescues his sister, but they are forced to leave.

Inability to start on his search for Rosa irks O'Reilly.

The Spaniards arrest O'Reilly and order him to leave Cuba. All Cubans are ordered to come into the cities.

When the World Runs Backward

Esteban went about his plan of destroying Pancho Cueto with youthful energy and zest. First he secured, at some pains, a half-stick of dynamite, a cap and fuse, and a gallon or more of kerosene; then he assembled his followers and led them once again into the San Juan.

La Joya was still tenanted when early in the evening its rightful owner arrived; the house and some of its outbuildings showed lights. Esteban concealed his men. While the horses cropped and the negroes rested he fitted fuse and cap to his precious piece of dynamite. It was likely, he thought, that Cueto had provided himself with a body-guard, and knowing the plantation house as he did, he had no intention of battering weakly at its stout ironwood door while his quarry took fright and slipped away.

Now while Esteban was thus busied, Pancho Cueto was entertaining an unwelcome guest. In the late afternoon he had been surprised by the visit of a dozen or more Volunteers, and inasmuch as his relations with their colonel had been none of the friendliest since that ill-starred expedition into the Yumuri, he had felt a chill of apprehension on seeing the redoubtable Cobo himself at their head.

The colonel had explained that he was returning from a trip up the San Juan, taken for the purpose of rounding up those inhabitants who had been dilatory in obeying the new orders from Havana. That smoke to the southward was from fires of his kindling; he had burned a good many crops and houses and punished a good many people, and since this was exactly the sort of task he liked he was in no unpleasant mood. He had demanded of Cueto lodging for himself and his troops.

Cueto had welcomed his visitor in all humility; he put up the soldiers in the bays of the sugar mill, and then installed Cobo in his best room, after which he ransacked the house for food and drink and tobacco.

Later he and the colonel sat long over their supper, for the latter's exultant humor continued. Cobo, it transpired, was delighted with the new captain-general, a man of blood and iron, a man after his own heart. This Weyler, he predicted, would put an end to the insurrection; there would be no more of Campo's weak, merciful methods, which were, in reality, nothing less than encouragement to revolt. Cueto, of course, agreed.

"We're sweeping the country as with a broom, and already Matanzas is bulging with refugees," the officer told him. "They call themselves pacíficos, but they carry information and aid our enemies. We'll have no more of that."

"Will it not be a great expense to feed so many people?" Cueto ventured.

"Let them feed themselves. Is it our fault that they make such measures necessary? By no means. Once we have them safe, we shall exterminate all whom we encounter in the country." The speaker drank deeply of Cueto's good wine and smacked his lips. "It's the kind of work I like. Extermination! They have had their warning. From now on we shall spare neither man, woman, nor child. The men are traitors, the women breed, and the children grow up."

Cueto nodded his complete approval of this program. "Oh, decidedly," said he. "This spirit of violence must be stamped out or none of us will be safe. Let me tell you I myself live in constant dread of that young villain, Varona. I—hope you haven't forgotten him."

"Forgotten him?" Colonel Cobo fingered a lately healed scar which further disfigured his ugly face, then he cursed frightfully. "It's by God's mercy alone that I'm alive tonight. And I haven't forgotten the girl, either. She'll have to come in, along with the others. The boy may stay out, but she can't."

Cobo finally took himself off to bed. Cueto followed in better spirits than he had enjoyed for some time. For one thing, it was agreeable to look forward to a night of undisturbed repose. Pancho's apprehensions had fattened upon themselves, and he had been living of late in a nightmare of terror.

But it seemed to him that he had barely closed his eyes when he was awakened by a tremendous vibration and found himself in the center of the floor, undecided whether he had been hurled from his bed or whether he had leaped thither. Still in a daze he heard a shout from the direction of Cobo's room, then a din of other voices, followed by a rush of feet; the next instant his door was flung back and he saw, by the light of high-held torches, Esteban Varona and a ragged rabble of black men. Cueto knew that he faced death. He uttered a shrill scream of terror, and, seizing the revolver which was always close at his hand, he fired blindly. Then his foes were upon him. What happened thereafter took but an instant. He dodged a blow from Esteban's clubbed rifle only to behold the flash of a machete. Crying out again, he tried to guard himself from the descending blade, but too late; the sound of his hoarse terror died in his throat, half born.

"Quick! Soak the bed with oil and fire it," Esteban directed; then he ran out into the hall to investigate that other shouting. He found the chamber whence it issued and tried to smash the door; but at the second blow he heard a gun-shot from within and the wood splintered almost into his face. Simultaneously, from somewhere outside the house, arose the notes of a Spanish bugle call.

Young Varona waited to hear no more. Nor did his men; realizing the peril into which they had been led, they bolted from the house as fast as they could go. There was no need for questions; from the direction of the sugar mill came belated orders and the sound of men shouting to their horses. Evidently those were troops—and trained troops, too, for they took no time to saddle; they were up and mounted almost before the marauders had rained the backs of their own animals. There was no opportunity to choose a retreat across the fields; Esteban spurred down the driveway toward the main calzada, yelling to his men to follow him.

Esteban's party would doubtless have made good their escape had it not been for that other guerrillero returning from his raid but, as it happened, the two forces met in the sunken road. Nothing but the darkness and the headlong approach of the fleeing men saved them from immediate destruction, for the collision occurred between banks too steep for a horse to climb, and with that yelling pack too close behind to permit of retreat.

Instantly there began a blind battle in these desperately cramped quarters. After the first moment or two friend and foe were indistinguishable and the men of both parties began firing or thrusting at whatever loomed nearest out of the gloom. The narrow ravine quickly became a place of utter confusion, a volcano of blasphemies, a press of postling, plunging, struggling bodies. Horses reared and bit at one another. Riders fought stirrup to stirrup with clubbed rifles and machetes; saddles were emptied and the terrified horses bolted. Some of them lunged up the banks, only to tumble down again, their threshing limbs and sharp-shod hoofs working more havoc than blows from old-time battle-hammers. Meanwhile those of Cobo's men who had ridden out from the sugar mill naturally attributed this new uproar to a stand of their enemies, and began to take the road with rifle fire; then, in obedience to the commands of their half-clad colonel, they charged. A moment and they were fighting hand to hand with their returning comrades. Spaniard clashed with Spaniard, and somewhere in the melee the six marauders battled for their lives.

Of course, after the first moment of conflict, Esteban had not been able to exert the least control over his men; in fact, he could not make himself heard. Nor could he spare the breath to shout he was too desperately engaged. When the full truth of the situation dawned upon him he gave up hope for his life and at first merely strove to wreak such havoc as he could. Yet while some of his faculties were completely numbed in the stress of that white-hot moment, others remained singularly clear. The shock of his surprise, the imminence of his peril, rendered him dead to any emotion save dismay, and yet, strangely enough, he remembered Rosa's pressing need for him and, more for her sake than for his own, fought to extricate himself from the confusion. His rifle was empty, he had his hot barrel in his hands; he dimly distinguished Asensio wielding his machete. Then he found himself down and half stunned. He was running here and there to avoid lunging horses; he was tripping and falling, but meanwhile, as opportunity offered, he continued to use his clubbed weapon. Something smote him heavily, at last—whether a hoof or a gun-stock he could not tell—and next he was on all-fours, trying to drag himself out of this rat-pit. But his limbs were queerly rebellious, and he was sick; he had never experienced anything quite like this and he thought he must be wounded. It greatly surprised him to find that he could struggle upward through the brambles, even though it was hard work. Men were fighting all around and below him, meanwhile, and he wondered vaguely what made them kill one another when he and his negroes were all dead or dying. It seemed very strange—a piece with the general unreality of things—and it troubled him not a little.

At last he gained the top of the bank and managed to assume an upright position, clinging to the bole of a palm tree. One of his arms was useless, he discovered, and he realized with a curious shock that it was broken. He was bleeding, too, from more than one wound, but he could walk, after a fashion.

He was inclined to stay and finish the fight, but he recollected that Rosa would be waiting for him and that he must go to her, and so he set out across the fields, staggering through the charred cane stubble. The night was not so black as it had been, and this puzzled him until he saw that the plantation house was ablaze. Flames were belching from its windows, casting abroad a lurid radiance; and remembering Pancho, Esteban laughed.

The time came when he could walk no farther. He tried repeatedly and failed, and meanwhile the earth spun even more rapidly, threatening to whirl him off into space. It was a terrible sensation; he lay down and hugged the ground, clinging to roots and sobbing weakly. Rosa, he knew, was just around the next bend in the trail; he called to her, but she did not answer, and he dared not attempt to creep forward because his grip was failing. He could feel his fingers slipping—slipping. It was agony. He summoned his last atom of determination, but to no avail. He gave up finally, and felt himself propelled dizzily outward into immeasurable voids. His last thought, as he went whirling end over end through space, was of his sister. She would never know how hard he had tried to reach her.

Bill Jones marched his wife and 12 children into a shoe store and told the clerk to fit them up. The clerk worked hard for almost two hours and at last had each of the thirteen wrims satisfied as to foot comfort so started to make out a sales slip.

Poem BY UNCLE JOHN

This life we live is irksome, no matter where we be; the road is lined with boulders, an' breakers crown the sea. But we mustn't get discouraged an' declare that life's a cheat, for the prospects ain't so cheerin' when a feller gets cold feet.

COLD FEET

The man that proves a winner, is the man that trims his sails, and steers his craft, unerrin' amid the storms or gales,—the hard knocks don't dismay him, which he squares his chin to meet, and his symptoms don't betray him—he never gets cold feet!

There ain't no road to glory, but what's beset with thorns, and it's purty hard to travel, if you're pestered some with corns. So, to make yer failure certain, wear yer pants out on the seat,—it's a sign that allers tells me that a feller's got cold feet. . . .

I like to greet the feller that can laugh at clouds an' cares—that squares himself in trouble, with his fists as well as prayers. . . . One that earns a benediction, that is mighty soft an' sweet. He blessed the world he lived in — and he never got cold

PUBLIC HEALTH

By Wm. M. Jones, M. D.

Resolved: Not to Worry
It is never too late to make a good resolution, especially when that resolution is, "Not to worry." Worry is abnormal, and is therefore injurious to health. It weakens the mental forces by tiring them out by doing nothing. It never gets anything done. It is mental labor for nothing.

The effect of chronic worry on health is almost that of poison. It not only disturbs the mind and perverts mental vision, but it disturbs the natural functions of the body, causing indigestion, poor nutrition, and neurasthenia. It often produces a condition of the bowels that favors constipation with all of its attendant evils. It undermines health, and is at all times a great menace to both mental and physical health.

For most people, worry is largely a habit that can be avoided. Oftentimes when reason is applied to worry, worry vanishes, which is to say that there is seldom a reason for worry. Strange to say, the things that people should worry over most worry them least. However, people can, by firmly resolving not to worry, and by looking at the physical and mental results of worry, do much towards living a saner, happier, healthier life.

A Sense of Fairness

"I should like to subscribe to your campaign fund," remarked Mr. Dustin Stax.
"I couldn't permit such a thing," replied Senator Sorghum. "My sense of fairness would not tolerate the thought. The last time you subscribed you put in only $10,000 and you took down about $100,000 worth of personal prestige and general publicity for your business."—Washington Star.

Grand Jury Makes Report; Progress Is Evidenced In CourtContinued from Page One rence Gregg and George Davis, negroes, who were tried for the larceny of an automobile. Blount and Davis drew a road sentence of two years, while Gregg was sentenced to one year on the roads.

Three charges of forgery of checks were presented against John Byers, the amounts being $15, $10 and $5. On the third count non-suit was ordered, but Byers admitted the truthfulness of the first two. The defendant testified that he was drunk when he forged the checks. He was sentenced to two years on the roads of the county.

Charlie Holt was convicted of larceny by the jury, which recommended leniency. Sentence has not yet been passed.

Sid Chandler, charged with slander against Asa Chandler, was found guilty and sentenced to serve one year on the county roads.

Prayer for judgment was continued upon payment of the cost in the case against Nettie Jackson, who admitted her guilt on a charge of immoral vagrancy.

Not guilty was the verdict of the jury as to Colton Fox, who was tried for forgery.

The jury convicted Sam Moore, a negro, of the larceny of clothing and $50 in cash from Edward Jones, another negro. At first Moore was ordered to serve one year on the county roads, but the sentence was cut in half when he said it was his first trouble.

Guilty with recommendation of mercy was the finding of the jury in the case against Milton Stafford, who was tried for the larceny of a watch from the home of O. D. Kivett. It was indicated that Stafford will be sent to Stonewall Jackson Training school, near Concord.

Jess Ball was convicted of false pretense. He was given his option of serving one year on the roads or paying a debt of $25 and a fine of $50, together with the costs, before the end of the present week. The defendant, according to testimony presented, had employed a negro to drive him to Mount Airy, but upon reaching his destination failed to pay the driver.

Charles Vaughn and Lewis McRay, negroes, were convicted of breaking into the garage of O. C. Fisher. Each received a road sentence of one year. Upon expiration of the sentences they will be turned over to Mecklenburg county authorities to stand trial for the larceny of an automobile.
