FOR THE GREENSBOROUGH PATRIOT.
NORTH-CAROLINA, No. V.

CONVENTION.

"What an old tale is this!"—
"I grant this argument is cold; but truth!"—
"No, years impat!"—Young.

Whenever we consider the circumstances under which the Constitution of North-Carolina was formed, we cannot but admire its general perfection. It is, in the main, republican and calculated to secure the citizen's rights. We need not, however, be so infatuated with veneration for its framers, or so dazzled with its excellencies, as to be blind to its imperfections; especially as they obtrude themselves on our feelings, as well as on our sight.

If it was the privilege of our ancestors, fifty years ago, to convene for the purpose of framing a Constitution on which to base their rights, it is no less ours, now, after the experience of half a century has shown that this instrument does not secure equal rights to all our citizens, to meet in Convention, for the purpose of amending it. We have no support of this opinion, all reason, together with the practice of all, or nearly all the original States. Most of the States, that formed their Constitutions during the confusion and trials of the Revolutionary struggle, have since found it necessary to hold Conventions for the purpose of amending them. Then where is the wonder, if the like necessity be found to exist in North-Carolina?

Moreover the experience of the States that have made the trial, evinces the entire safety of calling Conventions. Never has any danger resulted, nor a Constitution been deteriorated. There has, in some instances, been a murmur left behind, as doubtless there would be in North-Carolina, from those whose power might be justly abated. It is but candid to infer, that what has proved safe elsewhere, might be safely essayed in N. C. *Impartial accus-sity demands.*

But when the Convention is called, as sooner or later it certainly must be, if North-Carolina is destined even to emerge from its present groveling obscurity, I must say, in the language of Virgil, spurc, procul est profan! or of Young, to the same effect, "Fly ye profane!" Let no polluted hand touch this instrument. Let no sot, no gambler, no prodigal, no horse jockey, or other kind of knave; no trader in the goods of men, no fraudulent stockholders, or indulged bank debtor, no intriguing politician, nor any religious bigot, come near. Let only such as have clean hands, clear minds, liberal principles, and unbiased judgments, dare approach.—If a Convention of pure-minded patriots could be assembled, we might safely submit the whole Constitution to their disposal, either to amend, or to substitute a better in its stead. This should be returned to the people for their ratification or rejection.

I shall next proceed to consider some of the most prominent objections, which have been raised to calling a Convention; the answer to some of which I have in part anticipated.

It has been alleged, in opposition to calling a Convention to amend the Constitution, "that that instrument is sacred, on account of its having been framed by the patriots of the revolution;" "that it has carried us, with safety, through difficulties and dangers;" "that a desire for change and novelty should be disconcerted, as of dangerous tendency;" "that, by attempting to amend, we might deteriorate;" "that, though the Representatives of a minority of the people, have the power, they have never abused it, by partial Legislation;" and, therefore, "that the evils complained of, are not real, but imaginary."

"The Constitution is sacred." Why, what is it but a mere human performance? and sure enough it savours much of human imperfection. To sanctify that which is partial and unjust, is to wield the sword of despotism. Mankind have ever been oppressed by injustice, in the garb of sanctimony. It has carried us, with safety, through difficulty and danger. Are we not at this moment engulfed in difficulties and straits, from which we never can emerge, till the people rise in their native majesty, and declare they will be governed by no laws, but such as emanate from equitable first principles? "A desire for change & novelty should be disconcerted, as dangerous."

We admit that a restless and feverish excitability, which would be forever running into revolutions without any just cause, is reprehensible and dangerous. But, on the other hand, too great apathy to public concerns, is even more dangerous to a republic, in which an ever-watchful and untiring vigilance is the only safeguard. In a popular government, in which the laws emanate from the people, it is their duty, no less than their privilege, to see that the laws themselves, and the first principles on which they are based, are pure, equal and republican. "By attempting to amend, we may deteriorate." We have already pointed out the method of obviating this disappointment, namely, to trust the Constitution in the hands of none but patriots of liberal principles and pure morals. In delegating the power to amend the Constitution, the people ought to exercise the utmost caution, as the trust is very important; but by the time they are prepared to say soberly, "a Convention is indispensable," they will be also prepared to adopt the necessary caution. When the acquire of important right is the incentive, the people ought not to be deterred by bargains & possibilities. "Though the Representatives of a minority of the people have the power, they have never abused it, by partial Legislation." Very self-complaisant! very arrogant, truly! and yet, not admitted. Do we not see that many hurtful things are transacted under the sanction of law; that many good things, which might be enjoyed, are withheld for the want of legal sanction; that much public good needs the fostering hand of Legislation, and much public evil needs the curb of Legislative prohibition. Now ye that hold the reins, and arrogate so much, why are these things so? I tell you there is a mass of censure somewhere, and the bug of it lies at your door.

But admitting there is no just ground to censure abuse of power, it does not follow, "that the evil complained of is merely imaginary." Power without right is despotism. It is not necessary that every despot should be a tyrant; but every despot has it in his own opinion whether to be a tyrant or not, and may, at any time he chooses, become one. It may as truly be said, that we of N. C. live under a despotism, as if we live under an absolute monarchy; and which is justly ours.

Some seven or eight years ago, as must be recollect by every one who was then arrived at years of observation, there was great excitement on this subject; the whole argument was familiar in the mouths of every one; it seemed to be but awaiting popular favour, and rapidly maturing for a crisis; when suddenly it vanished like an apparition at the sunset each evening, and has never been heard of since, till now. I have started it afresh, scarcely knowing what I do; whether any patriot will respond a corollary; or, whether I stand isolated on enchanted ground; whether the excitement is only smothered, and waiting a gentle breeze to fan it into a狂風; or, whether apathy and sloth have totally extinguished it.

I have ever thought it betrayed a degree of baseness, thus to abandon a reform, which the emergencies of the times so imperiously demands; the question of which is incontrovertible, and the attainment of which seemed just within our grasp. I have often mentally exclaim'd, poor North-Carolina! Thou art goaded by a minority! Thy many are subservient to thy few! Thy energies have sapped a gigantic portion! Thy enterprise is driven into exile! Thy good tends to evil, and thy evil to worse! Thou art prostrate, and pinion'd; and hast neither nerve to exert, nor tongue to cry!—And then I whistle back my earnest thoughts—I have not, however, abandoned the hopes, that there is yet a redeeming spirit in North-Carolina, the beloved land of my nativity.

POLYDORE.

MINUTES
Of the General Association of the Manumission Society of North-Carolina.

This Association convened at Deep River Meeting House, according to adjournment, on the 14, of this month.

The President, E. Swain, Esq. informed the House that he had prepared an official communication, which was introduced and read as follows:

To the DELEGATES REPRESENTING the NUMEROUS BRANCHES OF THE MANUMISSION SOCIETY OF NORTH-CAROLINA, in GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

Gentlemen:—Another annual return of this day has summoned us together, that a solemn account of our conduct, as men pledged to support the cause of individual benevolence, may on this occasion be rendered to each other, to our country, to the world, and above all, to that Almighty Being whose gracious care we believe extends to all nations, languages, and colours of the human race; whose humble instruments we acknowledge ourselves to be, for the glorious enlargement of Africa's miserable and oppressed children. And besides the account that we are thus bound to render, the occasion is one that loudly calls for a repeated display of that sympathetic flow of sentiment, that lively warmth of fellow-feeling, that fearless independence of thought and expression, that courageous forbearance of soul, which have as often prevailed thus, and similar assemblages of manly enterprises. It is indeed matter of no small encouragement, that while voluntary societies of various kinds are daily rising and rising around us, this institution still stands up to its determined purpose.

Although me

ny of its original projectors are now taken among us, and numbered with the prostrate dead, not permitted by Divine Providence to behold the advancements in liberal principle that we have lived to see, not destined to realize only in anticipation those happy and ever memorable results, the prospect of which prompted so laudable a zeal; and many eyes now present beams with the delights of conscious innocence, eagerly piercing the veils of injury with anxiety and expectation, may be closed to the scenes of Earth, ere those patriotic efforts be crowned with full success; yet, based on the solid ever-during principles of truth and justice, yours is a cause that must endure though the operations of nature work perceptible changes in its visible agency, must and will survive all the apparent wrecks of time and mortal things.

The basis of this address will not admit a length of general observation. But I cannot suppress what has heretofore been suggested, that we should carefully guard our procedure from a course too speculative, and not practical enough. On the abstract question of slavery, we have nearly, perhaps quite succeeded. The justice of our claims in behalf of the African race, uncontroverted with considerations of domestic policy, is seldom questioned. Whether this was always self-evident without being shown by a Manumission Society, we shall not now stop to inquire. We would by no means claim for the Society a degree of efficiency to which it is not justly entitled. But every member and the country in general, ought to be fully acquainted with the extent of its achievements in order to duly appreciate its intrinsic merits. Whether we boast or not, the world must judge. One thing we know:—before these humane doctrines were thus systematically promulgated, the negro's right to free birth was seldom thought of, and scarcely ever acknowledged. But something more than mere assent is necessary. The slumbering energies of a mighty people must be awakened. The respective of all classes must be made to know, and sensibly feel the indignity that slavery offers to our common nature. Active benevolence must break forth in floods of sympathy. We want activity. We want a more combined effort; a more discriminating exertion. Before we have any right to expect success, we must steadily and resolutely pursue in practice our principle which we would hold out for the adoption of others. We must tenaciously adhere to a strict & decided course. Whether at home or abroad, whether in the meetings, or engaged in our prosigious intercourse with the world, we are expected to maintain a line of straight forward consistency, that cannot yield to temporary emergencies, or be sacrificed to the capricious excitement of momentary occurrences. If we have not much pecuniary surplus to expend, we have, or may have, what is infinitely better:—Sound and unshaken integrity, united with such unwearied perseverance as cannot fail to overcome the most formidable difficulties.

It is presumed there is no undashed business that requires advice here, unless you may think proper to resolve a specific inquiry into the promptness of those who have had in charge the execution of former measures.

It has been often repeated that we, as a Society, concur our views to no particular system of colonization; yet this is understood to be within the scope of our design to oust every practice in faculty for separating the coloured people from among us. The business of manumitting slaves in this State to say nothing of the policy of continental Emancipation, is well known and we are frequently told by Masters, that they would willingly sacrifice any lucrative opportunity of maintaining and sending their slaves out of the country. Under this view of the subject, I am induced to recommend, in your consideration, the propriety of establishing a prompt agency of some kind; persons something like busboys or servants—to act as agents or commissaries; sometimes two, or three. Agents within bounds of the Association, whose duty it shall be to advertise themselves ready at all times to receive, at their own discretion, an coloured people offered to their care, to whom judiciously hired out until a suitable day can be named to deliver the necessary expenses of Colonization, Emigration, Education if necessary, &c. &c. or of Agent, we, according to the contract made with the master or guardian, or the executors of the deceased. It never was anticipated that voluntary manumission could do any thing more than merely make experiments showing the practicability of liberating the people of colour, and separating them from among us. But if an agency of this, or a similar kind, can be established and maintained, there is little doubt that it will enable us to make further practical experience, and at the same time, afford a facility that is said to be much wanted.

The American Convocation for promoting the abolition of slavery was recently located in Washington City, D. C., to meet during the first Session of every new Congress. The next Session of the Convocation will commence on the second Tuesday in December. The subject of sending a Representation to that body is submitted to your consideration. You will find it noticed in a letter from the Secretary of the Acting Committee, herewith submitted.

You will find in the last paragraph of the same letter some communication on the subject of Free and Slave labour. Although this was sometime since addressed to me as a private letter, it is believed that I can best answer it by directly communicating it to you, and thus closing all the information that may be in the possession of your body.

The actuaries of the said Convocation did not come to hand in time to be held in our year sessional Session in March. They are now summu-ned for your examination. Your attention is particularly referred to the following parts, viz:—1.—Report on the Treasury department, page 13;—2.—Address to the citizens of the United States, page 17;—3.—Report on the Domestic Slave trade, page 21;—4.—Report on Free and Slave labour, page 25;—5.—Address to the separate Societies, page 23.

On the subject of petitioning, I have one suggestion to make:—that is the propriety of praying the next Legislature to leave owners at their own discretion in the liberation of their Slaves. Measures were taken a year ago for bringing this subject before the Legislature, but it is believed it never went forward. Whether the law-making power can, from motives of evident policy, control the disposition of private property in the hands of a citizen, is not the question. But whether the domestic policy of this State requires that a rational man, conscious of his accountability for the part he acts towards his fellow-creatures, ought to be compelled, contrary to the convictions of his own conscience, to hold human beings in a state of slavery, deserves to be well considered.

In closing this communication, I would repeat the call for delineate and activity. Notwithstanding the high-handed oppression that yet stalks through the land, and the length of time that may be requisite to restore a happy equality of personal rights, many things are ailing for our encouragement. Several hundred slaves in the State of Maryland have lately risen to the grade of freedom; all from the manumission liberality of one individual. The great slave of Virginia will shortly be looked to for a similar & signal banner against the perennial darkness of slavery in that State. In short, it is evident that the spirit of Africa, Emancipation is daily advancing with rapidity far surpassing the vigour of its white supporters.

Respectfully I remain, Gentlemen, your Fellow member,

B. SWAIM.

On motion of Aaron Coffin, the above Communication was referred to a select committee, consisting of Henry B. Hall, Aaron Coffin and Almon U. Thompson.

The Committee to whom certain questions, answers, &c. were referred at last Association, presented a report which was ordered to be filed.

A Communication from the New Salem Female Benevolent Society, was introduced, read, and ordered to be filed.

On motion of Amos Weaver, a Committee, consisting of Amos Weaver and James C. Kersey, was appointed to address the said Female Society, appropriately, on the subject which has enlisted their sympathies.

On motion of James C. Kersey, a Committee of Finance was raised, consisting of Howgil Julian and Benjamin Millican, sen.

On motion of Aaron Coffin, a Committee was appointed, consisting of Aaron Coffin, Thomas T. Hunt and William Reynolds, with instructions to enquire into some plan for a more direct Communication between the Association, the Board of Managers, and the Branches, and report tomorrow.

On motion of Richard Monte Hall, the House adjourned to meet again to-morrow morning, at 10 o'clock.

Saturday, September 12.

The House met according to adjournment.

The Rev. Amos Weaver delivered an extempore Address, which he was requested, by the Association, to forward to the Editor of the Greensborough Patriot, not for publication.

The Board of Managers produced the following Report, which the House adopted.

"The Board of Managers Report: That, since their Organization, they have had a Session, at which they examined extracts from the Minutes of last General Association, and ordered them to be published in the Greensborough Patriot, with fifty-two extra copies, to be sent to the Branches. At the same time, the Board had presented to their part of an address to the citizens of North-Carolina; and they examined it with satisfaction; but as the Committee appointed to prepare this address have not yet presented the whole of it to the Board, we can report nothing further on the subject. No other business has been brought before us, or has called itself as requiring our attention; nor have we any measure suggested.

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM SWAIM, Chair.

The House, after discussing the subject in Committee of the whole, ordered the Board of Managers to proceed with the address, according to the Minutes of last Association.

The Treasurer reported—Cash on hand, $12,10

—At interest, $10,24—Total, $20,34.

The Committee appointed to examine the sum of answers produced a report, which was ordered to be filed.

The Committee to whom was referred the President's Communication produced a report which the House amended and adopted as follows:

"The Committee to whom was referred the President's Communication, and the documents attached, using it, respectively, Report.

1. That in regard to the appearance of an Agency at this time, we think it would be expedient—Through we recommend the propriety of referring the object to the several Friends in our sessional, and that they be instructed to report their views to the next Association.

2. Considering the state of our finances, we think it would be advisable to adjourn to the next sessional Session in March. They are now summu-

POETRY.

"I find from each line the noblest truths inspire;
And in nature my conduct than my song."

DUETT.
TINKLETON.

Immortal Dolly Doubtless you,
You lovely little Bubble, you,
I want to know if you can show
A man that dare to trouble you?

DOLLY.
Sweet charming Signor Tinkleton,
Your bloom'ing cheek is wrinkled none
Of me; that be to trouble me,
I do not know a single one!

TINKLETON.
Come, love shall we be wandering?
The flowers their sweets are squandering,
The mirth gales adown the vales
Are lingering and pondering.

DOLLY.
O, what a charming man you be,
How fanciu, I can you be,
So very sweet, so very neat,
And kind' and brave, how can you be?

TINKLETON.
How blest your praises run her me,
You must the witch of End be he,
To strike my heart's sincerest part—
I swear I love you tenderly,

DOLLY.
You knew papa he selected me,
The day you first beheld me,
Because you stood—you know you would—
And in your arms enfolded me! (Languishes)

TINKLETON.
I swear by all those, you know
That I sincerely love you, though,
You called me then the "best,"
And I called you "my dove," you know.

DOLLY.
My name is Dolly—take me now,
You own love or make me now,
A mother she—for daddy he,
He should come, would shake me now.

TINKLETON.
But Dolly, O, my honey, though,
Just fetch a bag of money, though,
For if you don't—have you I went,
And would not that be funny, thought?

OLD MAN. (Centering.)
As well you earned plain, you,
Or I will be for drillin' you;
Quar'le to see me sight, for night but flight
Will hinder me from killin' you!

Evening omnia.

BACHELOR'S HALL.
Bachelor's hall; wha queer looking place it ist
Kome me from such all the loss of my life;
Save but I think wha burnin' dismisse itis,
Never all to be getting a wife.

See the Bachelor, gloomy and sad enough,
Etching his tittle over the fire,
Seen it too over—Saint Patrick he's mad enough,
(If he were present) to fight with the square.

Now like a hog, in a master-bed wallowing,
(Awkward enough) see him kneading his dough,
Truth if the bread he could eat without swallowing,
How it would flavor his pallet you know.

His dishcloth is missing, the pigs are devouring it,
In the porch he battered his shin—
A plate wanted washing grimy skin is scowling it
Thunder and Turf, what a pickle he's in.

Pots, dishes and pans, suee greasy comodities,
Ashes and pruit skins kiver the floor,
H' cupboard's a storehouse of comic oddities'
Things that had never been neighbors before,

His meal being over the table's left setting so,
Dishes like case of ourselves if you can't
But hunger returns, then he's fuming and fretting so,
Och! let him alone for the haste of a man!

Late in the night then he eves to bed shiverin',
Never the hit is the bed made at all,
He creeps like a toad under the kiverin'
Bad luck to the picture of Bachelor's Hall

To true, for junks!

TO DANDIES.

Ye impudent squinting wadd' faced pretty things,
With coxcomb'd as recht is fiddle strings,
Clicked as a clod, and snort as a cent;
About the waist D'sham, the pale B'flat;
Venerating supercilious white slaves;
Ye scoundrelous, haughty, heartless knaves,
Ye fat-lid king-apes, with codfish bites,
Ye scoundrelgo and play-ers! Talbot's Hall

SONG.

Till in the cup, the bowl, the glass,
With wine and spirit mix'd,
And we will drink, what round they pass
For Fog and Misery!

Push push! and the drunks are ready,
And down to the Golden Rule,
A scoundrel's swilling-sure
The scoundrel's swill!

Fill, fill again—fill higher still!
The glass more warmly press—
Fill up and drink, and drink and fill,
To—Human beastliness!

Push round! push round in quickest time—
The lowest drop be spent
In one loud round to—Guilt and Crime,
And—Crime's just punishment!

Fill, fill again—fill to the brim,
To—Loss of honest fame!
Quaff—deeper quaff—while now we drink
Our wife's and children's shame!

Push round! push round! with loudest cheers
Of mirth and revelry—

We drink to—Woman's sighs and tears,
And children's poverty!

Fill up the glass—fill yet more high,
Thus soon ne'er let us part—
Stop not at woman's tear and sigh,
Give—Beauty's broken heart!

Once more! while power shall yet remain,
Even with its latest breath,
Drink to ourselves—Disease and pain,
And—Infirmity and death.

VARIETY.

"Fancy has snatched all her flowers away
In tales, in trifles, and in children's play."

Crossing of Proverbs. Proverb—The more the merrier.

Cross—Not so;—One hand is enough in a purse.

P—He that runs fastest, gets most ground.

C—Not so; for then footmen would get more than their masters.

P—He runs far that never turns.

C—Not so; he may brake his neck in a short course.

P—No man can call again yesterday.

C—Yes; he may call till his heart aches, though it never come.

P—He that goes softly, goes safely.

C—Not among thieves.

P—Nothing hurts the stomach more than surfeiting.

C—Yes; lack of meat.

P—Nothing is hard to a willing mind.

C—Yes; to get money.

P—Nothing is so blind as them that will not see.

C—Yes; they that cannot see.

P—There is no creature so much like a man as an ape.

C—Yes; a woman.

P—Nothing, but is good for something.

C—Not so; nothing is not good for any thing.

P—Every thing has an end.

C—Not so for a ring has none, for it is round.

P—Money is a good comfort.

C—Not when it brings a thief to the gallows.

P—The world is a long journey.

C—Not so; the Sun goes over it every day.

P—It is a great way to the bottom of the sea.

C—Not so; it is but a stone's cast.

P—A friend is best found in adversity.

C—Not so; for then there's none to be found.

P—The pride of the rich makes the labour of the poor.

C—Not so; the labors of the poor make the pride of the rich.

P—Virtue is a jewel of great price.

C—Not so; for then the poor could not come by it.

Wants. The poor wants the comfort, and many of them the necessities of life.

The rich in general, want—the common feelings of humanity.

The bacchae wants—a rich client.

The physician wants—patients to use up his pills and to pay off his bills.

The mechanic wants plenty of work, and good spirits to do it, and prompt pay when its done.

The merchant wants—cash customers, and extension of credit.

Printers and Editors want—every man to do what is right, and to give them their dues.

It is whispered that some young ladies want—husbands; we think this may be a mistake; if it is, we will be happy to correct it.

In conclusion, we believe it will be admitted by all that every description of people want fortitude to bear with the ills of life—and that many, very many, want sufficient skill to float peaceable along the current of prosperity.

A Bed Lover. An indolent youth being asked why he was so shamefully fond of his pillow, to the manifest injury of his reputation—he replied, "I am engrossed every morning in hearing council—Industry and Health advised me to rise—Sloth and Idleness, to lie still, and they gave their reasons at large, pro and con." It is my part to be strictly impartial, and to hear with patience what is said on both sides; and by the time the cause is fairly argued, dinner is generally on the table.

Women. Women are generally deceived when they think they recommend themselves to our sex by their indifference about religion. Every man who knows human nature, connects a religious taste in our sex with softness and sensibility of heart; at least, we always consider the want of it as a proof that masculine spirit, which of all your faults, we dislike the most.—Besides, men consider your religion as one of their principal securities for that female virtue, in which they are most interested. Never charge yourself with religious subjects, or give countenance to them in others by seeming diverted with what they say. This to people of good breeding will be a sufficient check.

Let a woman be decked with all the embellishments of art and care of nature—but if boldness be to be read in her face, it blos's all the lines of her beauty.

Every station has its burden—Even as certain that it has also its peculiar pleasure, which becomes the sweeter by its opposite grievance.

Modesty is not only an ornament, but also a guard to virtue. It is a kind of quick and delicate feeling in the soul, which makes her shrink and withdraw herself from the thing that has danger in it. It is such an exquisite sensibility as warns her to shun the first appearance of every thing that is hurtful.

A man and his wife were, on a certain occasion, enlisted in a dispute, which of them had committed the fault in some late occurrence; at length the husband perceiving that it might amount to something unpleasant, kindly and sweetly remarked:—"Well my dear, I had as leave it would be me as you that committed the fault, for we have but one interest, and but one character?" "Yes my dear," replied the wife, "and I had as leave it would be myself as you." Of course the quarrel was healed in a moment. Let this principle go into full operation, and it will never fail to render happy the conjugal life, as well as sweeten and render all other relationships.

Old Maids. A certain lady living, as some say, in a state of single blessedness—but who was quite anxious to change it—attended a holy meeting, where she heard one of your old fashioned preachers hold forth. On her return home, in remarking upon the service, she observed she loved the minister much, as he prayed particularly for her. How—said one of the family—I do not recollect any thing you refer to? Why yes—replied she—for after mentioning the parish, the sick the dying, the widow and the fatherless—he prayed for those who had unmentionable troubles, and I am sure if there are any who come under this description, that it is poor old maids!

Conundrum. Why are females of the present day like the lilies in the scriptures?

Because they told not, neither do they spin, yet Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of them.

Anecdote. A young lawyer, boasting of his readiness to undertake the defence of any person accused of crime, declared that he would as soon undertake the cause of a man whom he knew to be guilty, as one whom he believed to be innocent. An aged Quaker being present, he appealed to him for the correctness of his view.—"What say you to that old gentleman?" "Why I say," replied the Quaker, "that fine lived in my neighborhood, I should keep my table locked—that's all."

Logic. Give me that logic that will prove black to be white, and white no colour at all.—Many are they who wield the weapon that can do it, and that too, despite of reason. "I will prove to you," says the logician, that every cat hath three tails." "And now?" inquired the gaping multitude. "Why thus? No cat hath two tails," "Granted." "Every cat hath one tail more than one cat." "True." "Two added to one are equal to three ergo every cat hath three tails."

A country clergyman was boasting of having been educated at two colleges. "You remind me," said an aged divine, "of an instant I knew of a calf that sucked two cows." "What was the consequence?" said a third person. "Why sir," replied the old gentleman, very gravely, "the consequence was, that he was a very great calf."

As the sun in all his splendor was peeping over the eastern hills, a newly married man exclaimed, "the glory of the world is rising!" His wife, who happened to be getting up at that moment, taking the compliment on her self, whispered out, "What would you say my dear, if I had my new silk gown on?"

"Sure Enough." We were pleased with the common sense manifested by an unfortunate son of Erin who had been tried before justice Whitton on the other day, "Are you guilty or not guilty?" said the clerk. "In what the devil are you put there for but to find out."

A man who had a scolding wife, being willing to excuse her failings, when called upon to give some account of her habits and character, said she was pretty well in general, only subject at times to a breaking out of the mouth.

WINDSOR CHAIRS.

THE Subscriber respectfully returns his sincere thanks to a generous public for their patronage heretofore, and now solicits a continuance of their favors. He will keep constantly on hand an excellent and beautiful assortment of Chairs, made of good materials and in a workmanlike manner, which he will sell low for cash or exchange them for country produce. He is prepared to repair and paint old Chairs, Sets, Tables, &c. on the shortest notice and at a price that must satisfy those who may employ him.

17th EAST STREET of fine and common quality made at the shortest notice and on the most moderate terms.

Orders from a distance will be thankfully received, & promptly executed.

MASONIC MIRROR.

The first number of the New series of this paper, was published on the 4th July. It will continue to be published regularly on Saturday morning of each week. The size is as formerly, eight pages quarto. The terms are $2. per annum, payable in advance. Brethren wishing this work, can be supplied with the numbers already published, on remitting the amount of one year's subscription in advance, addressed to the Publishers, of the Masonic Mirror, 46 Washington-street, Boston Mass.—Agents to the Amaranth are desired to accept the agency of this Mirror also, and to interest themselves in securing its circulation. The usual commission is allowed—every 7th copy.

Printers to whom the Amaranth is sent in exchange, will oblige by noticing the above.

CARDING MACHINE.

The subscriber has recently erected a wool Carding Machine; and takes this method of informing the citizens and the adjacent counties that he is prepared to card their carding, as well as it can be done in the State.

His prices are proportioned to the pressure of the times—to will card and roll, for spinning, at eighteen cents per pound, and break for hats, $1.50 per dozen.

His Machine is situated within a mile and a half of New-Garden Meeting-House. He is every thing in complete order, and solicits a share of the public concern.
