Ah, who sits wan and wisful there, No Christmas joyance in her soul, Upon her lip no prayer?

"Good-will to men! Good-will to men! In the rich place the tones made way, The pictured saints leaned down to hear,

Green-wreathed for Christmas Day.

"God-will to men !" O, lady fair!

In splendor weeping thus apart, How strange it seems a ragged boy Should have so glad a heart.

"Good-will to men !" The meaning pierced, Though selfish impulse barred the way,

And dimpled children, cherub-fair, Who into heaven had slipped away, Seemed whispering to the mother there Thoughts meet for Christmas Day,

While Christmas bells ring merrily, "O give to them," one seemed to say, "As once you gave to me."

She called the singer from the street, He sang it o'er and o'er again— "Peace on earth to sli who mourn; Good-will, good-wil! to men?"

Within her stately rooms no more

We have nothing to say about Dry Goods after you have bought your Shoes. It is natural for the man who carries everything to want to sell you all you buy. But is it right or business for you to buy your Shoes and everything you buy from one house, when, unless we sell you shoes we can sell you nothing? Why not divide up a little and give all a show?

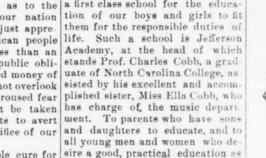

We have Shoes we can sell country merchants cheaper than some of the jobbers. Why? Because we bought them before Shoes went up, and they have sold all they bought before the rise in leather. We have them in solid 60 pair cases and can give you prices you cannot get elsewhere, in any quality
