OLD MAN HUERTA DRUNK AND MADLY DEFIANT.

A report comes from Mexico City that unsuccessful efforts were put forth by Gen. Huerta's delegates to the mediation conference to obtain from him a written promise of his resignation prior to their departure for the United States.

The reply of the dictator was a challenge to the delegates to shoot him, if they dared, and abuse for their attitude.

Realizing the obstacles that would be placed in the way of accomplishing anything decisive at the conference by their lack of instructions from Huerta, and regarding Huerta's eventual submission as inevitable, the delegates agreed that possibly they could secure better terms in the United States if they took the dictator's resignation with them.

On behalf of the delegates, three prominent Mexicans called upon Huerta and suggested the advisability of his placing his resignation in their hands, although not to be used without his consent. The emissaries found Huerta in a defiant mood, which was not lessened by frequent draughts he took from his ever-present cognac bottle. He rejected the proposal emphatically.

"You and the men who sent you are like all the rest," he said. "You want to get rid of me. You would kill me if you dared, but you haven't the courage. If you were as brave as men should be who meditate murder in their own hearts, you would assassinate me. Here, do it!"

The dictator reached to his holster and drew a revolver, which he held out to his callers. "Take it," he snapped. "Take it and shoot me. Go ahead, there is nothing to prevent you. You wouldn't be punished; every one around me would be glad to have me out of the way, and you would be heroes."

"No? There; you see, it is as I told you. Not one of you has the courage to do it. Tell the men that sent you that they will go to the conference without my resignation, or anything that looks like it. On the contrary, I shall tell them positively that I shall stay here as long as I please. If I am forced to flee I shall do so without resigning; I shall still be president."

THE CAMPAIGN AGAINST VOTES FOR WOMEN.

Charity and Children.

The women of the country, fearing that their modest silence on the suffrage question may be construed as an endorsement of the movement, and having no taste for parading their views in the public prints, have decided to adopt the red rose as the sign of their opposition to woman suffrage. They could not have made a better selection, as the red rose is the queen of flowers. We hasten to pledge our allegiance to the red roses. They are warring a losing campaign, we fear, but we rejoice that they have lined up against a movement that, if it becomes universal, will bring the womanhood of our country far more of loss than of gain. So far as woman suffrage has been tried, it has not been a shining success. Colorado is today in a state bordering on anarchy. Its government seems to be utterly powerless to bring order out of the chaos and confusion that reigns in the mining district. Colorado has had woman suffrage for twenty years.

The woman suffrage propaganda is a product of the West. The West is a wild country. The gentest of our women do not hail from that quarter of the United States. The older and more cultivated sections of the country will be the slowest to adopt this new departure. We are not saying that the movement has its basis in ignorance—that would not be true—but we do believe that the red roses live for the most part in the East and South, and the stronghold of the suffragette is in the West, where many another lad has found fertile soil in which to grow. The suffragettes will win, we have no doubt of that. Whether the change will be for good or evil, it is coming. But when it does come those who expect the millennium to dawn and strife and turmoil to cease, will be painfully disappointed. We will have to face the same old problems of government and we will deal with them in the same old way. There are bad women as well as good ones, and the bad will offset the good precisely as at present. Even the liquor question will not be settled any sooner with woman suffrage than without it.

The side of the red roses is not the popular side, but we are glad to take it and thus range ourselves in the finest company in the world.

This Country's War Presidents.

Charlotte Observer.
As it is a familiar saying that every American war of consequence has made at least one president and the matter has been in the public mind of late, perhaps a list of the war-made presidents would interest our readers at this time. They comprise Washington, Jackson, Zachary Taylor, Grant and Roosevelt. Garfield and Benjamin Harrison had military records which aided their political careers, but only in a general way. It occurs to us as an impressive fact, and the more so because while the power of declaring war is nominally with Congress it is actually with the president in the fullest sense, that not one of these men had a war during his administration. One of them, Washington, resisted extreme pressure for war. Another, Roosevelt, performed the greatest act of peace-making in which this country has ever appeared. Perhaps through the irony of events, it has been men of purely peaceful antecedents, except that McKinley was a boy soldier, who have had the waging of war.

ELEMENTARY SCHOOLING MOST NEEDFUL TRAINING.

With a view of determining how to adapt courses to the needs of pupils after leaving school, the division of education of the State foundation has made a study of all boys of thirteen years of age in the public schools of independent American cities. One-half of the thirteen-year-old boys in the public schools are in grades of the elementary schools, and that age was fixed upon for the purpose of the investigation as being the first year of compulsory school attendance. The results of the investigation are reported by Director Thomas H. Ayres in the Elementary Schooling.

From the facts learned about the thirteen-year-old pupils was that they had come from kindergarten to the first grade of high school. More than half of them were in the sixth grade or below. This was regarded as being abnormal, and in general the children who drop out of school earliest are those who are retarded seriously and are held in the lower grades at all times. These are the boys who have been school soon to go to work in the home or in preparation for the military service for the ranks of infantry with profit either to themselves or to the community.

Another fact brought out by this investigation, says the report, "was that there is a wide range of conditions in the various cities. In those making the poorest showing scarcely one in ten of these thirteen-year-old boys was in the seventh grade or above, while in the best at the other end of the scale, boys out of every ten were in sight of completing the common school course."

General Schooling More Important.
The reason in these figures is that it is not the problem of securing a thoroughly complete elementary schooling for all the children is far less pressing than that of instituting vocational industrial training.

The next set of data obtained gives the family background of these boys and their parents. The inquiry showed that only one-fifth of the boys are now living with their parents, and that among those who are only a few more than one-half are living where they were born. These facts are significant because it is also noted that the schools should be organized as centers of industrial training that will directly prepare the children to enter the local industries. But if these conditions maintain in the future, the great majority of adults are going to work in the same communities in which they receive their schooling.

The occupations of the fathers were studied in the hope that they might furnish a sort of index as to the life work that the young people now in the schools may be expected to choose. "One surprising fact shown by the figures," the report says, "is that only about one-half of these men are found in the industries of transformation, which include the building trades and all classes of manufacturing. This is important because plans for inaugurating systems of vocational training are commonly based on the proposition that a large majority of the young people in our city schools will find their life work in these industries."

Professional Workers in the Lead.
More of these men are engaged in professional work than are engaged in unskilled labor. The group of managers, superintendents and proprietors is practically as large as that made up of semiskilled laborers. The mental workers constitute more than one-third of all the workers.

"In American cities of 50,000 population and above there are twenty 'constant occupations' in which the number of workmen is everywhere at least equal to one for each thousand of population, and seven 'constant occupations' in which the number of women workers is at least equal to one in each 1,000 population."

"Other conditions being equal, vocational education and vocational guidance may well consider favoring 'constant occupations' over localized ones."

BURN SILK BEFORE BUYING.

University Course Tells How to Tell if Fabric is Pure.

Why did your last year's silk split and crack?
Because it was adulterated.

You might have tested it easily before purchasing and saved both money and worry.

A piece of silk and a match are all you need for the test. Light the match and apply it to the fabric. If it holds its shape the silk is adulterated with some of the various minerals so used. If it runs together in a puffy mass the silk is pure.

This is one of the tests given in the new correspondence course in fabrics offered by the extension division of the University of Wisconsin.

SURGERY CAVE NEW FACE TO DISFIGURED WOMAN.

Surgery has progressed to the point where it can supply new nerves, blood vessels, bones and even new faces to men and women who have been maimed and mutilated by accident or disease. European specialists have described to the congress of the American Surgical association many examples of the wonderful results obtained in reparatory surgery. Dr. Erich Lexer of the University of Jena, Germany, showed a once beautiful woman whose face he practically remade in two years. She had been disfigured in the explosion of an automobile.

First she was shown without a nose and with the vestige of a chin, with part of an ear and without eyebrows, and with her eye lids drawn down in hideous fashion. No more unpromising subject could have been presented. First the surgeon made a nose for her out of cartilage and fat and skin which he had obtained from other parts of her body. After awhile he saw that the nose was shaped up and molded anew. He made a chin for her, revised the disfigured mouth and put some artistic touches on the remains of her ears.

He finished with a portrait of the young woman in gala dress and smiling. She had not been restored to her former pulchritude, but, taken all in all, the surgeon had performed a most remarkable feat.

Operation For Hare Lip.

Then came a hare lipped young man with a decidedly unimpressive face. The surgeon literally transformed him in a few months into a Prince Charming and induced him to raise a mustache to cover the lip line. The final state of the youth was almost hand some enough for him to qualify as a riding master or a tango teacher.

From a surgical point of view one of the most brilliant operations, which was shown by Dr. Lexer in color photographs on the screen, was the transplantation of fat and part of a bone into a shattered patella, so that the free action of the knee was restored to the patient. The surgeon demonstrated also how he would obtain quantities of fat from legs and insert them under cheeks to fill up hollows or to smooth out forehead in which there were unsightly cavities. For a patient who had no external ears he built two perfectly good ones with graceful, scroll-like effects. A young girl whose face was her misfortune was changed into an attractive miss.

New Eyebrows.

Dr. H. Morestin of Paris told the congress that graftings and transplantations of tissues had considerably enlarged the limits of reparatory operations.

"They have enabled us," he continued, "to remedy under better conditions many grave deformities and to lead to many other restorations hitherto almost unattainable."

He spoke of the use of small fragments of skin, of cutaneous transplantation in two distinct times, of the grafting of eyebrows and mustaches and of the strengthening of the broken and mashed nose by grafting cartilage.

"Adipose graftings," continued Dr. Morestin, "are excellent for filling up empty spaces, bony hollows, for effacing the depressions of soft parts, and therefore they render the greatest service in repairing cranial gaps and facial deformities. Fatty tissue with a few blood vessels is most easily transplanted from one region to another. The readiness with which fat may be obtained and the great facility with which it may be used in all deformities and the beauty of the results obtained through these operations, which are attended with no risk, make adipose grafting a very valuable addition to aesthetic and reparatory surgery."

WOMEN IN AGRICULTURE.

Conference at Ambler, Pa., Will Show Them How to Make Money.

Many nationally known speakers have been invited to address a women's agricultural conference at the Pennsylvania School of Horticulture for Women at Ambler, Pa., May 16. This will be the first conference held under the auspices of the association.

The conference is to cover an unusual variety of subjects, such as agricultural education for women, hardy flowers, foreign food plants, fruit, poultry, vegetables, peonies and iris, aquatic plants, violet culture, canning, preserving, etc.

The National association is formed to bring together those people interested in various forms of agriculture and horticulture for women, to spread information relative to these subjects, to bring producer and consumer together, and to establish an employment bureau for women agriculturists, and further the work of helping women to earn their living out of doors.

The school at Ambler is the first of its kind in the United States.

Easy to Misjudge Remedy You Need In Overcoming Blood Trouble Do Not Be Fooled By Mere Claims.

Study the Game and You Will Understand Why Some Things Are Deceptive.

In treating any blood disorder the fundamental fact must be observed that the aim and object of the medicine used is to permit a hit, a home run and a sure, safe hit every time.

Now the propulsive effect of S. S. S. is to regulate the blood formation, to assist in development of tissue and to have a decided bearing upon the lymphatic influence, all of which is in the promotion of blood health. And this propulsive effect will be similar to the straight ball pitched to insure a safe hit and not the deceptive gyrations designed to fool the batter. S. S. S. is a plain, straight blood purifier. It is not a fanciful mixture to move the bowels and thus falsely play upon susceptible minds. It is not a nerve excitant to exhilarate for the moment and then die away. It contains none of those mineral drugs which dry up the tissues. In other words, it does not play to the benches nor to the "fans." It is just a wholesome, powerful, searching blood remedy, one ingredient of which serves the active purpose of arousing each cellular part of the tissues to select from the blood the nutrient or materials required for renewal of health.

S. S. S. is prepared from nature's own materials, not an ounce of drugs being used. And yet it is more potent, more powerful, more searching and more productive of restorative results than from the most active of all the minerals employed in medicine.

Its action by elimination of the irritating poisons that infect the blood, is one of the very important things to know. You can get S. S. S. at any drug store, but take no other so-called blood purifier falsely claimed "just as good."

S. S. S. is prepared by The Swift Specific Co., 909 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., and if you have any deep-seated or obstinate blood trouble, write to their Medical Dept. for free advice. It will be worth your while to do so.

Recovery.

Pomeroyton, Ky.—In interesting advices from this place, Mr. A. J. Hughes writes as follows: "I was down with stomach trouble for five (5) years, and would have sick headache so bad, at times, that I thought surely I would die.

I tried different treatments, but they did not seem to do me any good.

I got so bad, I could not eat or sleep, and all my friends, except one, thought I would die. He advised me to try

Thedford's Black-Draught, and quit taking other medicines. I decided to take his advice, although I did not have any confidence in it.

I have now been taking Black-Draught for three months, and it has cured me—haven't had those awful sick headaches

since I began using it.

I am so thankful for what Black-

Draught has done for me."

Thedford's Black-Draught has been found a very valuable medicine for derangements of the stomach and liver. It is composed of pure, vegetable herbs, contains no dangerous ingredients, and acts gently, yet surely. It can be freely used by young and old, and should be kept in every family chest.

The following North Carolina congressmen were renominated in the primaries Saturday: Small in the first district, Kitchin in the second, Poir in the fourth, Page in the seventh, Dougherty in the eighth and Webb in the ninth. Golwin, in the sixth district, had previously been declared the nominee by the Democratic executive committee, and the renomination of Stedman in this, the fifth, district only awaits the formal action of the convention to be held June 2. The result in the third and tenth districts is in doubt. The fight in the third is between Congressman Faison and ex-Congressman Thomas and in the tenth district there is a close contest between Congressman Gudgeon and R. R. Reynolds.

The report of Nelson O'Shaughnessy on Old Man Huerta's drinking, as quoted by the New York World, says: "He drinks much like the nervous and overworked broker or business man in America who finds it necessary to get four or five drinks into his system in the morning before he feels just fit; and Huerta can hold an awful lot." The records show that our nervous and overworked business men who take four or five drinks in the morning soon go to the undertaker labeled "arteriosclerosis" or "cirrhosis of the liver." Huerta may hold an awful lot, but it is evident that he is on his way.

British geographers cite Col. Roosevelt's discovery of a hitherto unknown river in South America, but there is no denial anywhere of the fact that he discovered the Great Salt river in the United States in 1912.

It is stated that consideration of demands for the elimination of Gen. Huerta from the presidency of Mexico will not be barred by the Mexican delegates to the mediation conference at Niagara Falls, despite the refusal of Huerta to place his resignation in the hands of his delegates. The representatives claim they have ample authority to agree to anything "consistent with Mexico's national decorum."

Dr. Charles W. Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard University, says: "Not only creeds, but symbols and rites of the Christian church need brushing up. They are rusty, and even moth-eaten." Dr. Eliot is evidently a full-fledged progressive, but he is not likely to make much headway in "brushing up" church creeds.

Noting the agricultural department's report indicating a fine crop of wheat this year, the New York World says the hardest luck the Republican party could possibly have would be for a bumper wheat crop to fall in a year when it is out of power and cannot claim the credit for the farmers' prosperity.

How a Ship Gets Through the Gatun Locks.

A vessel passing through the locks of the Panama canal will have all its movements controlled in much the same manner that the movements of a train are controlled in entering a complicated railroad terminal. At Gatun, Pedro Miguel and Miraflores, an operator standing before a control board will open and close the gates, fill and empty the lock chambers, and perform every other operation necessary for letting a ship through, simply by throwing a succession of switches, and will know at any instant just what is happening in the locks without having to look beyond the indications shown on the board before him. Furthermore, the mechanism is so interlocked that it will be impossible for him to set any machine in motion except in the proper order and at the proper time. The triple flight of locks at Gatun extends for a distance of 6,200 feet, while the operating machinery is scattered over about 4,000 feet of that distance. This is all controlled from a board, 64 feet long, which is virtually a miniature of the locks and the operating machinery, and is located in an operating tower at the foot of the upper flight of locks. A picture of this wonderful control board appears in the June Popular Mechanics Magazine.

There is more catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. SAPP'S CATARRH CURE, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address F. J. BRIEF ITEMS OF GENERAL NEWS

United States Senator Bradley, of Kentucky, Republican, has announced that all health and inability to bear the hardships of a campaign compelled him to announce that he will not be a candidate for re-election. He is serving his first term, which ends next March.

Because he did not like his job at the estate of William M. Magruder, of Camden, Md., Richard Hawkins, a twenty-year-old colored boy, set fire to the Magruder residence, which was destroyed April 15. When placed under arrest, the boy said his mother would not allow him to give up his position, so he decided to make his services unnecessary by destroying the house.

Because the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Pacific railroad hired a special train to the mob that lynched her, Mrs. Alice Rogers was awarded $7,500 damages from the railroad by a compromise decree entered in the Federal court at Jackson, Miss. Mrs. Rogers' petition asked for $50,000. Her husband was killed by a mob at Tallulah, La., after he had been acquitted of murder by a jury.

Dr. T. C. Reed, chairman of the official medical department of the Army, Homeopathic Medical Association, announced a new treatment for tuberculosis at a meeting of the society Thursday. He said he had experimented for twenty-five years with a preparation of mercury and had found it cured tuberculosis of the nose, throat and lungs, and in many cases pulmonary tuberculosis.

Many Americans and other foreign owners return to the Paradise district and reopen their properties within 15 days, the mines will be sold and operated for the benefit of the Mexican people, according to a notice said to have been issued by General Luis Heredia, of the Federal district. It is estimated that there is from $20,000,000 to $30,000,000 in foreign capital invested in the Federal district.

Secretary of the Navy Daniels announced Monday a few days ago that he had accepted Fletcher's word for the cost of the 9,000 American soldiers and sailors who were landed from the ship when that ship was sunk at sea. Some time later the body was shipped home.

fluence of liquor. The secretary agrees with Admiral Fletcher that this makes a new record for the navy, and in fact for any navy of the world.

Had Brilliant War Record, Raleigh Review.

The late Ben Hines, who died last week in Tampa and whose remains were buried Sunday at Milton, had a brilliant war record. At the beginning of the late war with Spain he enlisted and pressed onward into battle. He took part in the battle of San Juan and was afterwards transferred to the Philippine Islands. In the Philippine jungles he was a party of ten which was attacked by 300 Moros. At his elbow a comrade fell, shot through the abdomen. Although himself worn out by fighting and long marching, Mr. Hines shouldered his wounded countryman and bore him over four miles of soggy swamps back to camp. Four hours later the wounded man died, and Mr. Hines buried him. Learning the name of the unfortunate soldier, Mr. Hines communicated the news to the hero's mother, in Pennsylvania. Some time later the body was shipped home.

Deductions From the Tariff.

Philadelphia Record.
Not much attention need be paid to newspapers that are attacking the Underwood tariff on the ground that it is not a revenue producer. The decrease of revenue from customs has been $25,000,000 in six months, which is less than was expected, and it is believed that the income tax will not fall short of $100,000,000, which will be double the loss in customs for 12 months. The importation of finished manufactures increased only $13,000,000 in half a year, which, distributed over the whole manufacturing field, cannot have much influence at any one point. The decreased import of materials presumably reflects less activity by our mills, but the decreased exports of our manufactured goods indicates unfavorable conditions abroad.

SAM DURKEE'S GIRL

By O. HENRY.

Sam Durkee had a girl. Her name was Ella Baynes. They appeared to be devoted to each other, and to have perfect confidence in each other, as all couples do who are and have or aren't and haven't. She was tolerably pretty, with a heavy mass of brown hair that helped her along. He introduced me to her, which seemed not to lessen her preference for him; so I reasoned that they were surely soul-mates.

Miss Baynes lived in Kingsfisher, 20 miles from the ranch. Sam lived on a gallop between the two places.

One day there came to Kingsfisher a courageous young man, rather small, with smooth face and regular features. He made many inquiries about the business of the town, and especially of the inhabitants cognominally. He said he was from Muscogee, and he looked at his yellow shoes and crocheted four-in-hand. I met him once when I rode in for the mail. He said his name was Beverly Travers, which seemed rather improbable.

One day, when I was messenger for half a gross of cigarette-papers and a couple of wagon-tires, I saw the alleged Beverly Travers in a yellow-wheeled buggy with Ella Baynes, driving about town as ostentatiously as the black wax mud would permit. I knew that this information would bring no balm of Gilead to Sam's soul, so I refrained from including it in the news of the city that I retailed on my return. But on the next afternoon an elongated ex-cowboy of the name of Simmons, an old-time pal of Sam's, who kept a feed store in Kingsfisher, rode out to the ranch and rolled and burned many cigarettes before he would talk. When he did make oration, his words were these:

"Say, Sam, there's been a description of a galoot miscellin' himself Bevel-edged Travels impairing the atmospheric air of Kingsfisher for the past two weeks. You know who he was? He was not otherwise than Ben Tatum, from the Creek Nation, son of old Gopher Tatum that your Uncle Nert shot last February. You know what he done this morning? He killed your brother Lester—shot him in the cot-house yard."

Pumped Six Bullets Into the Body the Brown Dress Covered.

I wondered if Sam had heard. He pulled a twig from a mesquit-bush, chewed it gravely, and said:

"He did, did he? He killed Lester?"

"The same," said Simmons. "And he did more. He run away with your girl, the same as to say Miss Ella Baynes. I thought you might like to know, so I rode out to impart the information."

"I am much obliged, Jim," said Sam, taking the chewed twig from his mouth. "Yes, I'm glad you rode out. Yes, I'm right glad."

"Well, I'll be ridin' back, I reckon. That boy I left in the feed store don't know hay from oats. He shot Lester in the back."

"Shot him in the back?"

"Yes, while he was hitchin' his boss."

"I'm much obliged, Jim."

"I kind of thought you'd like to know as soon as you could."

Simmons rolled a cigarette and stabbed his pony with both heels. "Twenty yards away he reined up and called back:

"You don't want no assistance, as you might say?"

"Not any, thanks."

"I didn't think you would. Well, so-long!"

Sam took out and opened a bone-handled pocket knife and scraped a dried piece of mud from his left boot. I thought at first he was going to swear a vendetta on the blade of it, or recite "The Gipsy Curse." The few feuds I had ever seen or read about usually opened that way. This one seemed to be presented with a new treatment. Thus offered on the stage, it would have been hissed off and one of Belasco's thrilling melodramas demanded instead.

"I wonder," said Sam, with a profoundly thoughtful expression, "if the cook has any cold beans left over!"

He called Wash, the negro cook, and finding that he had some, ordered him to heat up the pot and make some strong coffee. Then we went into Sam's private room, where he slept and kept his armory, dogs, and the saddles of his favorite mounts. He took three or four six-shooters out of a bookcase and began to look them over, whistling "The Cowboy's Lament" absintractly. Afterward he ordered the best two horses on the ranch saddled and tied to the hitching-post.

Now in the fuel business, in all sections of the country, I have observed that in one particular there is a delicate but strict etiquette belonging. You must not mention the word or refer to the subject in the presence of a feudist. It would be more reprehensible than commenting upon the mole on the chin of your rich aunt. I found, later on, that there is another unwritten rule, but I think that belongs solely to the West.

I yet lacked two hours to supper-time; but in 20 minutes Sam and I were plunging deep into the reheated beans, hot coffee and cold beef.

"Nothing like a good meal before a long ride," said Sam. "Eat hearty."

I had a sudden suspicion.

"Why did you have two horses saddled?" I asked.

"One, two—one, two," said Sam. "You can count, can't you?"

His mathematics carried with it a momentary qualm and a lesson. The thought had not occurred to him that the thought could possibly occur to me not to ride at his side on the red road to revenge and justice. It was the higher calculus. I was booked for the trail. I began to eat more beans.

In an hour we set forth at a steady gallop eastward. Our horses were Kentucky bred, strengthened by the mesquit grass of the West. Ben Tatum's steeds many have been swifter, and he had a good lead; but if he had heard the punctual thuds of the hoofs of those trailers of ours born in the heart of feudland, he might have felt that retribution was creeping up on the hoof-prints of his dapper nags.

Our first sight of them we had in Guthrie.

"What are you waiting for, Sam?" I said in a whisper. "Let him have it now!"

Sam gave a melancholy sigh.

"You don't understand; but he does," he said. "He knows. Mr. Tenderfoot, there's rule out here among white men in the Nation that you can't shoot a man when he's with a woman. I never knew it to be broke yet. You can't do it. You've got to get him in a gang of men or by himself. That's why. He knows it, too. We all know. So, that's Mr. Ben Tatum! One of the 'pretty men' I'll cut him out of the herd before they leave the hotel and regulate his account!"

After supper the flying pair disappeared quickly. Although Sam haunted lobby and stairway and halls half the night, in some mysterious way the fugitives eluded him; and in the morning the veiled lady in the brown dress with the accordion-plaited skirt and the dapper young man with the close-clipped hair and the backboard with the prancing nags were gone.

Five miles farther we came upon the future great western city of Chandler. The horses of pursuers and pursued were starved and weary. There was one hotel that offered danger to man and entertainment to beast; so the four of us met again in the dining room at the ringing of a bell so resonant and large that it had cracked the welkin long ago. The dining room was not as large as the one at Guthrie.

Just as we were eating apple pie—how Ben Davies and tragedy impinge upon each other—I noticed Sam looking with keen intentness at our quarry where they were seated at a table across the room. The girl still wore the brown dress with lace collar and cuffs and the veil drawn down to her nose. The man bent over his plate with his close-cropped head held low.

"There's a code," I heard Sam say, either to me or to himself, "that won't let you shoot a man in the company of a woman; but, by thunder, there ain't one to keep you from killing a woman in the company of a man!"

And, quicker than my mind could follow his argument, he whipped a Colt's automatic from under his left arm and pumped six bullets into the body that the brown dress covered—the brown dress with the lace collar and cuffs and the accordion-plaited skirt.

The young person in the dark sack suit, from whose head and from whose life a woman's glory had been clipped, laid her head on her arms stretched upon the table; while people came running to raise Ben Tatum from the floor in his feminine masquerade that had given Sam the opportunity to set aside, technically, the obligations of the code.

He Had to Explain.

I am a dentist and one night the boys had asked me to "sit in a little game." I told them to telephone me and say that Mr. Johnson wanted me to come at once and pull some teeth. At 7:30 the telephone call came and I said: "Yes, Mr. Johnson, I'll be right down."

"Of course," I told my wife, "I am sorry to leave you alone, but business is business." I returned at 1 a. m.

Next morning my wife asked: "Where is your dirty handkerchief? I must send the washing away today." I told her that it was in my pocket.

In a few minutes she came back with some white, red and blue poker chips in her hand, which I had dropped in my pocket the night before and forgotten. Sweetly she asked: "Are these Mr. Johnson's teeth?"

That was my most embarrassing moment.—Chicago Tribune.

Historic Blackguards

Pizarro, Licensed "Hold Up Man"

A YOUNG swineherd—born in Estramadore, Spain, in 1476

—heard vague rumors of the New World across the Atlantic which Columbus had lately discovered. He heard of Pizarro boundless wealth, mountains of gold and silver, rivers and caverns flashing with priceless gems—all of which were supposed to be found for the searching, everywhere in America.

The swineherd—Francisco Pizarro by name—had perhaps never in his short life seen a single gold piece or eaten a hearty meal. The tales of riches made him suddenly discontented with his own humble routine. He was ignorant. To his latest day he could never manage to learn how to read or write. But far wiser men than himself had been taken in by these stories of a land of wealth. The only difference between such men and Pizarro was that he actually succeeded in winning such riches.

Leaving his swine Pizarro sailed with a company of seedy adventurers to the West Indies. There was much work and small reward at first. But he kept on. Through trade and robbery he had picked up enough money by 1515 to settle near the new city of Panama as a farmer. It was a laughable anti-climax to his visions of wealth. But Pizarro was not the sort of man to be laughed at.

As soon as he could scrape together a little capital he formed a partnership with another adventurer, Amalagro, and a priest named Luque, and went in search of fortune. The expedition was a failure. But in the course of it Pizarro heard of a southern country—Peru—where gold was said to be as cheap as iron. He raided the Peruvian coasts, but gathered scanty spoils.

Nevertheless, he believed he was at last on the right track. He went to Spain to get money and royal authority for further explorations. In Seville he was thrown in prison for debt. His career seemed to be at an end. But he managed to interest the king of Spain in his schemes. The king released him and gave him a royal commission to conquer Peru. He set forth and, in 1531, began his invasion of the gold land.

Using a civil war in Peru to help on his adventure, he at length found his way to the palace of the Inca (emperor). Entering the palace as a trusted guest, Pizarro made the Inca a prisoner, and under threat of death by torture forced the luckless prisoner to pay for freedom by a strange ransom.

This ransom was no less than a huge roomful of gold. To gain this sum it was necessary to strip the sacred Peruvian temples of their golden ornaments. The full amount, when it was at last turned over to Pizarro, was worth more than $17,000,000. Having secured this, he calmly murdered the Inca.

The vile act set all Peru buzzing about the Spaniard's ears like a nest of enraged hornets. But Pizarro paid little heed to the danger.

Wealth—wrong by torture and treachery—flowed fast into his coffers. He had found no literal mountains of gold and caverns of gems. But he had discovered how just as great riches could be annexed through cruelty. His partner, Amalagro, shared to some extent in the prosperity and new-found power. This did not suit Pizarro. There were quarrels, and Amalagro was induced to lead an expedition against Chili. This was in July, 1535. The Indians took advantage of Amalagro's absence to attack Pizarro, but were unable, in spite of their vast numbers, to overcome him.

When Amalagro came back new quarrels broke out. And the two former comrades at last came to open war. Amalagro was captured by Pizarro's troops and was put to death. But his followers kept up the strife.

On Sunday morning, June 26, 1541, a band of these men burst into Pizarro's palace at Lima. Pizarro sprang up from his breakfast table, half armed, and flew at his assailants like a wild beast. He was of gigantic stature, and despite his sixty-five years he was still a dangerous foe. A fierce battle waged. Three of the conspirators were slain by Pizarro before he fell, mortally wounded, under a score of sword thrusts.

He got out and gave directions to the chauffeur. Then he did a very strange thing. He hailed another taxi and, climbing in, started off in the wake of the two women. From a point of vantage near the corridor leading to the "American bar," he saw Hetty slip her slippers and move off toward the left. Whereupon, seeing that she was quite out of the way, he approached the manager's office and asked for accommodations.

"Not a thing, sir."

"Everything has been taken for weeks, sir. I'm sorry."

"Sorry, too. I had hoped you might have something left for a friend who expects to stop here—a Miss Castleton."

"Miss Castleton has just applied. We could not give her anything."

"Eh?"

"Fortunately we could let her have rooms until eight this evening. We were more than pleased to offer them to her for a few hours, although they are reserved for parties coming down from Liverpool tonight."

Booth tried the Cecil and got a most undesirable room. Calling up the Savoy on the telephone, he got her room. The maid answered. She informed him that Miss Castleton had just that instant gone out and would not return before seven o'clock.

"I suppose she will not remove her trunks from the station until she finds a permanent place to lodge," he inquired. "Can I be of any service?"

"I think not, sir. She left no word, sir."

He hung up the receiver and straightway dashed over to the Savoy, hoping to catch her before she left the hotel. Just inside the door he came to an abrupt stop. She was at the news and ticket booth in the lobby, closely engaged in conversation with the clerk. Presently the latter took up the telephone, and after a brief conversation with some one at the other end, turned to Hetty and nodded his head.

Whereupon she nodded her own adorable head and began the search for her purse. Booth edged around to an obscure spot and saw her pay for and receive something in return.

"By Jove!" he said to himself, amazed.

She passed near him, without seeing him, and went out into the court. He watched her turn into the Strand.

When the night boat from Dover to Calais slipped away from her moorings that evening, Hetty Castleton and her maid were on board, with all their bags and trunks, and Brandon Booth was supposed to be completely at sea in the heart of that glittering London town.

The night was fog-laden and dripping, and the crossing promised to be unpleasant. Wrapped in a thick sea-lander Hetty sat huddled up in the lee of the deckhouse, sick at heart and miserable. She reproached herself for the scurvy trick she was playing on him, herself and yet pitied herself.

A tall man came shambling down the narrow space along the rail and stopped directly in front of her. She started in alarm as he reached out his hand to support himself against the deckhouse. As he leaned forward, he laughed.

"You were thinking of me, Hetty," said the man.

For a long time she stared at him, transfixed, and then, with a low moan, covered her eyes with her hands.

"He is true—is it a dream?" she whispered.

He dropped down beside her and gazed at her in his strong, eager arms.

"You were thinking of me, weren't you?" And reproaching herself, and hating herself for running away like this? I thought so. Well, you might just as well try to dodge the smartest detective in the world as to give me the slip now, darling."

"You've spied on me?" she cried,

in muffled tones. She lay very limp in his arms.

"I did," he confessed, without shame.

"And when I think of what I might be doing at this moment if I hadn't found you out in time! Think of me back there in London, racing about like a madman, searching for you in everywhere."

"Please, please!" she implored.

"But luck was with me. You can't get away, Hetty. I shan't let you out of my sight again. I'll camp in front of your door and you'll see me without a sliver of sleeplessness, for one or the other of my eyes will always be open."

"Oh, I am so tired, so miserable,"

she murmured.

"Poor little sweetheart!"

"I wish you would hate me."

"Lie where you are, dearest, and—forget!"

"If I only could—forget!"

"Rest. I will hold you tight and keep you warm. We're in for a nasty crossing, but it is paradise for me. I am mad with the delight of having you

here, holding you close to me, feeling

you in my arms. The wilder the night

the better, for I am wild with the joy

of it all. I love you! I love you!" He strained her closer to him in a sort of paroxysm.

She was quiet for a long time. Then

she breathed into his ear:

"You will never know how much I

here, holding you close to me, feeling

you in my arms. The wilder the night

the better, for I am wild with the joy

of it all. I love you! I love you!" He

strained her closer to him in a sort of

paroxysm.

She was quiet for a long time. Then

she breathed into his ear:

"You will never know how much I love you!"

He felt a queer, sickening sensation

of uneasiness sneak into existence. In the back of his mind, a hateful fear began to shape itself. For a long time he looked into her somber eyes, and as he looked the fear that was hateful took on something of a definite shape.

"Did you know her husband?" he asked, and somehow he knew what the answer would be.

"Yes," she replied, after a moment.

She was startled. Her lips remained parted.

He watched her closely. "Has this secret anything to do with Challis Wrangell?"

"It has," said she, meeting his gaze steadily.

His hands clutched the edge of the table in a grip that turned the knuckles

white.

"Hetty!" he cried, in a hoarse whisper. "You—can't mean that you—"

"You must go to Sara," she cried hurriedly. "Haven't I told you that she is the one—"

"Were you in love with that infernal scoundrel?" he demanded fiercely.

"Sara knows everything. She will tell you—"

"Were you carrying on an affair with him while professing to be the friend of his wife? Tell me that! Did she find you out and—"

"Oh, Brandon, why will you persist?" she cried, her eyes aflame. "I can tell you no more. Why do you glare at me as if I were the meanest thing on earth? Is this love? Is this your idea of greatness? Isn't it enough for you to know that Sara is my loyal, devoted friend; that she—"

"Wait!" he commanded darkly. "Is it possible that she did not discover your secret until the day you left her house so abruptly? Does that explain your sudden departure?"

"I can answer that," she said quietly. "She has known everything from the day I met her. I have not said anything, Brandon, to lead you to believe that I was in love with Challis

Wrangell, have I?"

His eyes softened. "No, you haven't.

I—I hope you will forget what I said.

You see, I knew Wrangell's reputation.

He had no sense of honor. He—"

"Well, I have!" she said levelly.

He flushed. "I am a beast! I'll put it in this way, then: Was he in love with you?"

"You are still unfair. I shall not answer."

He was silent for a long time. "And Sara's lips are sealed," he mused, still possessed of doubts and fears.

"Until she elects to tell the story, dearest love, my lips are also sealed. I love you better than anything else in all this world. I could willingly offer up my life for you, but—well, my life

does not belong to me. It is Sara's."

"For heaven's sake, Hetty, what is all this?" he cried in desperation.

"I can say no more. It is useless to insist, Brandon. If you can wrest the story from her, all well and good. You will hate me then, dear love. But it cannot be helped. I am prepared."

"Tell me this much: When you refused to marry Leslie, was your course inspired by what had happened in—connection with Challis

Wrangell?"

"You forget that it is you that I love," she responded simply.

"But why should Sara urge you to marry Leslie if there is anything—"

"Hush! There is the waiter. Come to my sitting-room after breakfast. I have something to say to you. We must come to a definite understanding.

This cannot go on."

He was with her for an hour in that pinched little sitting-room, and left her there without a vestige of rancor in his soul. She would not give an inch in the stand she had taken, but something immeasurably great in his make-up rose to the occasion and he went forth with the conviction that he had no right to demand more of her than she was ready to give. He was satisfied to abide by her decision. The spell of her was over him more completely than ever before.

"There is only one person in the world who can tell you, Brandon. It is for her to decide. I mean Sara Wandall."

He felt a queer, sickening sensation

of uneasiness sneak into existence. In

the back of his mind, a hateful fear

Establishing a Right of Way

It seems like pretty smooth sailing, when you get a clear line and have a telephone talk with a party in another city a thousand miles away.

You see nothing of the wonderful switchboards where skillful operators handle your call and the lines are "hooked up" to give your talk the right of way over two thousand miles of copper wire, guarded every inch of the way from all kinds of interference.

You scarcely realize that during every moment of your thousand-mile telephone talk, telephone apparatus and plant valued at from $150,000 to $200,000 are at your exclusive service.

In the Bell Telephone system 26,000,000 connections are made daily, giving clear tracks for the telephone talk of the nation and requiring over one billion dollars' worth of telephone equipment.
