Koontz, Ashboro Street school; Miss Hunter Irvin, Lindsay Street school; Miss Nell Clark, Simpson Street school. The teachers of the various schools will be chosen later.

In seeking to avoid a collision with Mr. G. W. Davenport's automobile on East Market street Monday afternoon, Mr. D. R. Huffines turned his car suddenly into a tree on the sidewalk in front of Mr. C. E. Moore's residence. The machine was badly damaged, but the prompt action of Mr. Huffines probably averted serious if not fatal personal injuries.

Mr. William H. Hawthorne, a student at Elon College, and Miss Anna Seine, of Salisbury, were married in this city Tuesday afternoon, the ceremony being performed by Rev. Dr. C. W. Byrd, pastor of West Market Street Methodist church. The couple had some difficulty in obtaining a license, but overcame this after a delay of a few hours.

Egelson and was followed by a reception at the home of the bride's parents on Battie Ground avenue. After a wedding trip that will embrace visits to several places in the North, Mr. and Mrs. Schewel will be at home in Lynchburg, where the groom is engaged in business.

Jenkins, died Tuesday afternoon at the home of her parents on South Eugene street, following an attack of appendicitis with which she was stricken while visiting in Winston-Salem Sunday. The funeral was held from the First Christian church yesterday afternoon at 5 o'clock and interment made in Greene Hill cemetery. Rev. H. E. Rountree conducted the services.

The work of adding a sixth story to the Dixie building, on the corner of South Elm and Sycamore streets, has been begun and will be completed during the summer. The annex to the building in the rear, work on which has been in progress for some time, will also be built to a height of six stories. The entire floor of the sixth story will be occupied by the Jefferson Standard Life Insurance Company, which at present is housed on the second floor of the Fisher building.

The McClamroch Marble and Tile Company, a well known business concern of this city, of which Mr. J. R. McClamroch is the active manager, was placed in bankruptcy Tuesday. Both the assets and the liabilities are estimated at about $25,000. Mr. W. E. Phipps was appointed receiver and required to furnish bond in the sum of $10,000. It is said that the failure of a South Carolina firm that owed the company several thousand dollars was responsible for the bankruptcy proceedings.

Mr. G. C. Ashmore, local manager of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company, and Miss H. Cartland, daughter of Mrs. H. H. Cartland, were married Tuesday night at 8:30 o'clock at the home of the bride's mother on North Elm street. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Upon their return from their wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Ashmore will be at home at the residence of the bride's mother.

George Crutchfield Quits Revenue Job.

Mr. George P. Crutchfield, who has been in the internal revenue service as a deputy collector for the past year, has resigned the position and returned to his home in Greensboro. Mr. Crutchfield was one of the first field men appointed after Col. W. H. Osborn became commissioner of internal revenue and for several months was assigned to duty in the territory tributary to Greensboro. Later he was transferred to a new field and for several months has been at work in Virginia. Mr. Crutchfield did not like to remain away from his home and family for long intervals of time, and being unable to get permission to work nearer home, resigned from the service. The place paid $1,500 a year, with an allowance of $1,000 for expenses.

Answer Filed in Libel Suit.

The answer to the complaint in the libel suit instituted in the Superior court of Guilford county by Hon. A. L. Brooks against Mr. D. P. King, of Leaksville, for $25,000 damages for alleged libel, has been filed in the office of the clerk of the court and the case is scheduled to come up for trial during the term of court to convene Monday. The suit is based on the publication by the defendant King of an article that is alleged to have contained defamatory and libelous utterances concerning the plaintiff. Mr. Brooks had appeared as counsel in a lawsuit against Mr. King and the article was published after the case had been tried and decided adversely to Mr. King.

Cotton Crop Below Standard.

The condition of the cotton crop of the country is the lowest since 1871, with the exception of 1903 and 1907, according to an announcement made this week by the United States department of agriculture. It issued statistics showing the condition on May 25 as 74.3 per cent of a normal, or 7 per cent below the 10-year average.

The low condition of the crop, it was said, was due largely to excessive rains and exceptionally cool nights in central and northeastern Texas, eastern and southern Oklahoma and southwestern Arkansas, which brought the condition percentage in those states down to 65, 68 and 79, respectively. In Texas many farmers were obliged to replant several times.

The automobile industry continues to furnish the most thriving branch of our export trade. Government figures show a marked increase over even last year's high mark. Automobiles bid fair to take a place in international trade as "American specialties," along with agricultural machinery, steel office furniture and several other things.

GREENSBORO LAWYER IN IMPORTANT LITIGATION.

The lawsuit affecting vast tracts of land which Mr. E. J. Justice, of this city, has been prosecuting in San Francisco for the government was decided Monday in a decision adverse to the government. An Associated Press dispatch from Los Angeles gives the following account of the result of the trial: "The withdrawal order by which William H. Taft, in 1909, while president, exempted from entry government lands in California variously estimated in value at from $250,000,000 to $1,000,000,000, was declared invalid in a decision by Judge Maurice T. Dooling, of the United States District court of San Francisco.

"The former president had planned to provide a great source of fuel for the American navy by exempting the oil land from entry by private locators. The decision gives to the Midway Oil Company and the Standard Oil Company, principal defendants, undisputed possession. "Similar minor actions now pending will be affected by the decision."

Gun Metal

That's a funny name for a kind of leather isn't it? The full name is gun metal calf, and real gun metal calf is one of the best materials used in the manufacture of fine shoes. But to have too much of a thing is not desirable, even if it's a good thing. Which leads us to say that we have too many ladies' gun metal oxfords and pumps in stock, mostly on account of the late arrival of warm weather this season, and we are going to reduce the surplus by reducing the price. Next time you are in the store ask to be shown the Sherwood and La France footwear advertised at cut prices. All sizes here now, and you will find it well worth your while to investigate this special offering.

OUR WEEKLY FASHION LETTER

Correspondence of The Patriot.

New York, June 1.—A smartly-dressed woman once said to me, "To be well-dressed a woman must season her wardrobe with a dash of pepper of cleverness and a bit of the spice of individuality, and mix them with the spoon of common sense."

That is true, indeed. A woman who is well-dressed, but without the individuality needed to give her distinction. It is said of the American and English women that the French woman has not that indefinable air of style, which is so large a part of the French woman's charm, is that they leave too much to the dressmaker and put too little of themselves into their gowns. The result is that they are well-dressed, but often lack the quality of being their own clothes a part of them. In fact, they look subservient to their apparel.

Course Linen and Plaid Ratine Make This a Frock of Novel Smartness.

This quality is rather subtle; it may mean correct use of a bit of color, or a little hand embroidery on a telling spot. However, a great deal depends upon wearing the right gown at the proper time and occasion. In fact, more mistakes are committed on this score than on any other.

For my first illustration I have used a gown which is appropriate for many usages. The waist and long tunic are of heavy, coarse linen, braided down the front in a simple and effective design. The underskirt and jog in the waist are of plaid ratine, blue, pink, white. A starched collar of linen is the only stiff thing about the dress and adds a touch of trimness to the costume which is otherwise noticeable for its pliant, falling folds. With this gown is worn a charming hat, covered entirely with small white flowers. The slender aigrette adds height and catches the hat and indirectly to the costume.

Waistcoats and waistcoat effects are seen on the newest and smartest of Parisian suits and dresses. The waistcoat dress in the second illustration is unusual in its style and in its development. The body and sleeves of the bodice are of sheer embroidered linen, while the waistcoat, collar and cuffs are of fine pique. The long tunic, pointed in front, is of the embroidered linen, with a wide hem of the pique hemstitched to the edge. The narrow underskirt is of the white pique.

Full capes in cloth, serge, moire and satin are seen everywhere—for walks down the avenue, for shopping and for evening wear. Skirts, with capes to match, are often used in the place of the jacket suits. They are made in all colors, yellow and navy blue, lined with black moire silk, having the collar and pocket cuffs of the same, the front being shorter than the back, which ripples in a graceful and dashing manner.

The sleeveless zouave jackets, in military style, are very good and practical for summer suits. These are trimmed across the front with ornaments and braid, and have a high Roman striped belt, fastened in front. The armhole of these jackets drop very little on the shoulders. The neck is rather low in the back, giving ample room for the new standing collars in lace or organdy.

Simple in the extreme is the treatment of the decollete. Sleeveless, and placed high over each shoulder, the bodice of the low evening gown may be either square in front, circular like the dresses of ancient Greece, or crossing like the fichu of the eighteenth century, but only in the front of the bodice. The back of the gown is cut extremely low in a V, largely with the bodice coming to a point on either shoulder to show the rounded upper arm, as well as the center of the back.

Paradoxical as it may seem, the popularity for the cross effects noticeable in the use of ribbons and the placings of the belt is inspired and controlled by the vogue for the narrow and straight line. It shows itself strongly in five points of the costume: First, the skirts; second, the belts; third, the jackets and vests; fourth, the corsage, or waist of the gown; fifth, in the fastenings of the cape.

The modest fichu is the forerunner of the style of crossing lines on the bodice, the draped effect beginning at the shoulder and crossing at the waist in a sort of fichu belt.

The skirts are floating and vague, and at the same time they are held captive. They flutter in the breezes but cling closely to the figure. This effect is given by flounces, one or many. They are pleated and gathered, or cut to ripple, and their flowing line is full of charm. The binding of their wayward fullness is accomplished by a band of cloth or ribbon, which is placed in a zigzag line around the body, developing into the double-crossed tunic, with its varied effect in line.

The capes show the crossed effect more strongly than any one garment. The straps cross and recross and the flowing fabric is thrown across the shoulder with a military air.

To the flat headdress often an accent is given by the aigrette, which is now very, very small: Aigrettes in spun glass, Malacca, steel, or jet, are held on by encircling chain or narrow ribbon, jewel-set, of metal. For instance, two fine tentacles, slim-jeweled aigrettes, rise from above the left ear, while the narrow flat gold band which holds them circles the head, passing below and over the top of the right ear. Again, a small tuft of spun glass springs from a round but flat-based jewel, which is placed in the center of the forehead, held there apparently by its own weight, and a chain of fine pearls that rises in a V from the center jewel to circle the top of the coiffure at the back of the head.

Sheer Embroidered Linen Weighted With Waistcoat and Tunic Hem of White Pique.

Meanwhile, it is to England we owe the modern art of the eyebrows. These the artist rectifies the mistakes of the Creator and abets Nature, so that the brow not only betrays a type of character, but hides the true significance of brows that so frankly betray traces that do not accord with the features of a beauty's face. Tenderness is given to a hard nature, jealousy becomes hauteur, lack of decision becomes chastity. Thus, the feature that Flaubert compares to two arches of triumph under which a double sun sets, and which the Chinese poets describe as a swallow in its flight, the English beauty connoisseur of the twentieth century regards, as did Buffon, who, in his Histoire Naturelle, declares the part of the visage which, after the eyes, contributes more to the physiognomy are the eyebrows. Therefore, today we correct nature and rectify her mistakes; even innocence no longer is a prey for the marauder; today a protection, a deception, it is true, protects the ignorant under the false sign of knowledge.

Insisted on Fair Game. Golfer (unsteadily by good cheer) to Opponent—"Sir, I wish you clearly to understand that I resent your unwarranted interference with my game, sir. Tilt the green once more, sir, and I chuck the match!"—Punch.

THURSDAY, JUNE 4, 1914.

Yesterday was the anniversary of the birth of Jefferson Davis and the occasion was fittingly observed in many places throughout the South.

Congressman Doughton, of the eighth district; Webb, of the ninth, and Pou, of the fourth, yesterday were nominated to succeed themselves by the conventions of their respective districts.

Governor McCreary, of Kentucky, announces that he will appoint Johnson N. Camden, chairman of the state Democratic committee, United States senator to succeed the late Senator Bradley, Republican.

From a signed statement from a number of citizens interested that appears elsewhere in this issue of The Patriot, it would appear that there is a little excitement around Pleasant Garden over the school bond election to be held at that place next Tuesday.

The members of the Wake county grand jury have called on the presiding judge and the solicitor of the district to protect them from charges made against them by Rev. R. L. Davis, superintendent of the North Carolina Anti-Saloon League, who asserted that the grand jury would not indict persons guilty of selling liquor.

The progress of the Mexican mediation conference at Niagara Falls has been halted temporarily by a hitch as to the terms and conditions upon which the delegates of Gen. Carranza, the Mexican constitutional leader, shall be admitted to the conference. It is not improbable that Carranza's delegates will take no part in the conference.

With this issue The Patriot inaugurates a new feature in the shape of a weekly fashion letter that we hope and believe will prove interesting to our women readers. The letter is written by one of the country's leading designers and style experts and will give at all times up-to-date and accurate information concerning styles and fashions in women's wearing apparel.

Sacrificing their lives that the lives of four companions, two of them girls, might be saved, three young men, none of whom could swim, leaped into the Delaware river from a sinking row boat, in the vicinity of Philadelphia Saturday, and were drowned. The boat was leaking and to prevent it sinking the three jumped out. Despite the sacrifice the boat soon capsized, but the four occupants were rescued.

The third district Democratic congressional convention met in Goldsboro yesterday and succeeded in naming a candidate for Congress after a stormy session of several hours, in the progress of which a number of the delegates added to the excitement by engaging in a free-for-all fight. After several delegates had been sent to the hospital for repairs on their anatomy, the convention got down to the business for which it met, and on the first ballot George E. Hood, of Goldsboro, was nominated for Congress. Mr. Hood will succeed Dr. J. M. Faison, of Duplin county, who is serving his second term in Congress.

William J. Bryan will speak in Reidsville July 4 during the progress of a chautauqua to be held there that week.

ROOSEVELT'S ATTACK FREEBLE

CRITICISM OF WILSON ADMINISTRATION FAILS OF ITS PURPOSE.

Colonel Roosevelt's widely-heralded "blast" on Saturday against the Wilson administration has left a flat taste in the mouths of the opponents of the administration. They are sorely disappointed that his volley has turned out to be of wax bullets, and without the impetus for harmful effect upon those responsible for the administration.

Progressives and regular Republicans had looked to the anticipated Roosevelt statement as a rallying cry for all of the opposition of Democratic rule. They had hoped for a carefully prepared, vigorously phrased utterance, which would represent the last word of possible criticism of the acts of the administration. They hoped it would be the keynote for a movement to unite all forces which disapprove of the party in power in a movement to elect an opposition candidate in 1916.

Fusionists, standpatters and radical Bull Moose have waked up to the realization that the only thing hoped for, which had been realized, in the Roosevelt statement was its restraint from widening the breach between the two wings of the Republican party. As far as cementing the opposition to the administration, that condition is admitted to be as far off as it was before the colonel dictated his statement before sailing for Spain.

Democratic critics realize that they must await a spokesman. The colonel's attack undoubtedly will have no practical effect in the next national campaign, they say, and admit with regret that its delivery has weakened, in advance, any blast which may emanate from Oyster Bay in the near future.

The most important political effect of the Roosevelt utterance, political students believe, will be helpful to the administration. That it will accelerate the passage of the administration's trust program is almost universally believed. The former president's strongest sentences were devoted to the necessity for adequate revision of the trust laws. The effect of these statements will be to strengthen the hands of President Wilson in demanding the completion of the trust program.

Recently administration leaders in Congress have faltered somewhat in their confidence in the wisdom of pushing the trust bills to enactment at this session. Many of them have inclined to the view that the Democratic congressional candidates would be better off if they could go before the country on the tariff and currency issues alone. It was declared also that the country was tired of the hum-drum of legislation, and that the trust program would serve only to cloud the tariff and main issues in the campaign. Persons close to the administration, and Republicans as well, declare that the administration now will be forced to go ahead with the trust revision.

Representative Palmer said, in discussing the statement:

"I think Colonel Roosevelt's statement answers itself in a sense. He charges that the Democratic tariff has failed to benefit the people. It had the support of members of his own party. If it fails as a revenue producer, or in other ways, Progressives must bear some of the blame. In the sixty-second Congress when the house Democrats revised the tariff, schedule by schedule, nearly all the Progressives voted for the bills. Mr. Roosevelt had been in the United States after an absence of about nine months. He is hardly in a position to say, of his own knowledge, that business is bad, but it is improving. In the past few months I have been in 46 of the 67 counties of Pennsylvania. Business is not on full time. There is an abundance of money, and I am convinced that with good crops in sight and a decision by the interstate commerce commission that normal conditions will soon be restored. He is giving judgment before legislation is passed. He has nothing to say about the new banking law, a statute that is generally approved by the business men of the country."

After a search of several months, engineers of the United States bureau of mines have perfected a device which will enable miners engaged in rescue work to enter chambers filled with poisonous gases and carry on operations for more than two hours. The device, while not altogether original, is a marked improvement on the rescue apparatus worn by miners following disasters. In perfecting it three men engaged in conducting the experiment lost their lives.

WHITSETT.

Ed. B. Wheeler has just completed listing the taxes for Rock Creek township. He listed at five points—Whitsett, Foust's mill, W. H. Fogleman's, H. R. Carmon's, and Gibsonville. It has kept him busy for the most of the month. This township (Rock Creek) has the fourth highest taxable valuation of the eighteen townships in Guilford county, being led alone by Gilmer, Morehead and High Point.

Capt. J. A. Wimbish, who has been here for some time with his son, has come to Greensboro for a visit of some weeks.

His many friends here are greatly interested in the wonderful record that Carl Ray, of the Winston baseball team, is making this year. Ray has been athletic coach for the school for two years and is very popular here.

Prof. C. C. Wimbish has moved a building on his residence lot here and will soon greatly improve the property.

W. J. Thompson, who recently conducted a land and lot sale here, has been having a number of inquiries since the sale and will soon close deals for a number of additional lots. It is beautiful property and will open up the place here splendidly for about a mile.

S. B. Watt, who recently purchased four nice lots here, will soon build on them a home. He is the rural mail carrier on route No. 1 from Whitsett.

A. P. Gilbert, of Durham, was here last week representing a line of fine excursions.

Dr. Whitsett returned the first of the week from High Point, where he delivered the address at the commencement of the city graded schools. On his way back he stopped over for the State Normal commencement.

Mrs. Joseph B. Whitsett has been quite sick for the past two weeks, but is improving at this writing.

Mr. and Mrs. R. K. Davenport, of Edinboro, Greensboro, were pleasure visitors yesterday. They came down to visit relatives.

Ernest C. McLean, who holds a temporary position with P. Lorillard & Co. of New York city, as a subordinator in one of their factories, came on a visit with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. McLean, who remain in the South for three weeks, spending part of his vacation with his brother, who is conducting a successful real estate business in South Carolina.

George H. Parker and child, who have been here for some weeks on a tour, will return to Spartanburg, S. C., tomorrow, where her husband soon is a traveling salesman in that city.

Dr. W. W. Early, who was recently appointed as counsel to Leicester, England, is well known here. For some time he was located here as a practicing physician, going from here to his present home at Marietta, in Gibson county.

Miss James S. McNider, who was nominated without opposition as senator from the first senatorial district, was a student here some years ago, graduating here in the class of 1906. He has represented his county in previous legislatures.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Frank Swift and Miss Carrie Carmon have returned from a visit to relatives at Denton. They made the trip in an automobile in five hours.

Robert Fitzgerald, of the University of North Carolina, is at home for the vacation. He is a junior this year.

city of North Carolina, is at home for the vacation. He is a junior this year.

Miss Ethel Phillippi, who has been at the State Normal in Greensboro for the past year, is at home for the vacation.

Quite a good deal of petty stealing has been a local annoyance for some weeks. Last night A. P. Greeson detected two parties in a grain house of his and gave chase but failed to overtake the parties, although he is pressing the case and has some strong evidence.

The new catalogue for Whitsett Institute is now in the press and will appear very soon. It will show a fine year, with marked progress in every direction.

SUMMERFIELD.

Miss Pearl Seagrove of Connelly Springs, visited Mrs. Martin Wright, at Mrs. Byrd's, from last Thursday until Monday.

Mr. David Wright is very busy now getting his machinery placed in his new roller mill. He will soon be ready to serve the people of the community.

Dr. Willis is sporting a new automobile.

Mrs. Byrd and family made a very pleasant visit to High Point last Sunday to see Mrs. Gattis Foster. They found her in very feeble health. Mr. Foster was, as usual, cheerful and light-hearted, considering his feeble condition.

Rev. D. A. Highfill, of Powellton, Va., is expected to reach Summerfield this week to see his mother, who is in very feeble health.

Prof. Short, of Pilot Mountain, was a visitor in the village last Saturday and Sunday.

Farmers have been busy setting out tobacco since the recent rains. The severe dry weather delayed all farm work considerably.

Mr. R. L. Borun, who has been very ill with rheumatism, is much better.

Democratic Convention Adjourns in Deadlock.

Asheville, June 2.—After being in session four days and taking 471 ballots, the tenth district Democratic congressional convention at Waynesville today adjourned, adopting a resolution providing for a district-wide primary August 15, to choose a Democratic nominee for Congress from this district. There were five candidates before the convention, Robert R. Reynolds and the incumbent, James M. Gudger, Jr., holding practically all the votes. The other three candidates held enough votes to deadlock the convention and the primary plan was finally selected as the most feasible solution of the deadlock. In the event no candidate receives a majority of the votes at the primary August 15, a second primary between the two leaders will be held August 29.

ANNUAL MEMORIAL SERVICE AT FRIEDEN'S CHURCH.

Sunday was the annual memorial day at Frieden's church, located two miles north of Gibsonville. This is one of the oldest churches in this part of the state, there being some graves in the cemetery showing 1724 as the date of burial. The church was flourishing even before the Revolutionary war, and during the war the church was used for a short time as a quaternary place for soldiers. The fourth church now stands on the grounds. The present building, of brick in the handsome Corinthian style of architecture, is a striking building.

Hundreds of visitors from all parts of Guilford and Alamance came Sunday to swell the congregation, and the local attendance represented almost every family in a radius of several miles of the church. The usual church services were held in the morning, and after the church service the large congregation marched to the cemetery and the graves were covered with masses of flowers brought and sent from every direction.

After a short while given to dinner on the grounds, the large congregation again gathered in the church and the memorial service was held. There were three speakers for the occasion—Hon. Charles A. Hines, of Greensboro; Rev. W. G. Cobb, Jr., who has recently been granted admission into the Lutheran ministry, and Dr. W. T. Whitsett. The exercises in the afternoon occupied about two hours and the large congregation gave an attentive hearing to the entire program.

This congregation has sent out scores of strong men in the past, and special mention was made of this fact during the exercises. The German settlers who came into this part of the state were almost without exception members of the Lutheran church, and represent the earliest settlements of the days of yore, sharing in point of age with the Presbyterians who settled near Alamance and Buffalo, and the Quakers who located around New Garden, now known as Guilford College.

Numbers of friends and former members and others whose early life was connected with this community came from a distance to be present on this interesting occasion. This memorial day has been an annual affair for some time, and grows in interest as the years go by.

BRICK CHURCH.

Mr. Riley Brown is still confined to his bed.

Quite a number of our people are having their cream shipped to the Guilford County Creamery in Greensboro.

Rev. D. C. Cox preached his farewell sermon last Sunday. He is a very popular preacher here and many are regretting his leaving. He has accepted the Burlington charge.

The Greene township Sunday school convention was held here last Sunday. The program was made very interesting and a large crowd was present.

Mr. George Ingle, a very promising young minister of this community, will preach at Brick church Sunday. Mr. Ingle has been so fortunate as to win two medals at Catawba College this spring.

CENTER.

We are still looking for rain.

Rev. H. W. Reynolds attended children's day exercises at Ebenezer Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. William Perry, of Saxapahaw, visited their daughter, Mrs. Ed. A. Hodgin, Saturday and Sunday.

Mr. W. H. Gregson is confined to his home by malarial fever.

Mrs. C. E. Hockett had the misfortune Sunday afternoon to have the large bone of her left arm broken in jumping from a buggy.

Benny Pierce, of Randleman, was arrested a few days ago with stolen goods in his possession and is in jail. He answers the description of the man who operated near here two weeks ago.

The Empress of Ireland Disaster

THE greatest marine disaster since the sinking of the Titanic and rivaling it in extent occurred off Father Point, the landing place down from Rimouski, Que., when the Empress of Ireland, crack ship of the Canadian Pacific's Atlantic fleet, was in collision with the big cargo steamship Storstad, bound in, loaded with coal.

The Empress of Ireland sank in nineteen minutes after the collision, which occurred in a dense fog, and close to 2,000 lives were lost. In the Titanic disaster, April 14, 1912, the life loss was about 1,503.

Asleep When Crash Came.

A dense fog covered the gulf of St. Lawrence at the time of the collision. The point where the disaster occurred is slightly less than 200 miles from Quebec, from which port the Empress of Ireland sailed May 28.

At this time of the year accidents in the gulf of St. Lawrence are frequent and oftentimes serious.

This great disaster of the sea is remarkable in that it happened not in mid-ocean, but so close to land that the operations of the government vessels, the Storstad and the lifeboats were plainly visible from the tower above been summoned by the wireless telegraph on board the doomed liner.

The Canadian government steamer Eureka and the mail tender Evelyn were at Father Point when the wireless station at that point received at 2:30 in the morning quick, frantic "S O S" signals. Both vessels were under steam and went out at once at their highest speed.

The wireless calls weakened rapidly. Fifteen minutes after the first was received they ceased. The rescue vessels were without wireless, and until dawn there was no news from the wreck.

Whistles Echo In Fog.

Captain Kendall was on the bridge of the Empress of Ireland when at 2:30 o'clock he heard the siren of a vessel close at hand. The vessel was the collier Storstad, Captain Anderson, laden with 7,000 tons of coal and bound from Sydney, N. S., to Quebec.

With signals sounding the vessels approached each other in the fog. The boom of the siren of the Storstad grew louder with each repetition. Captain Kendall ordered the engines stopped, and the big passenger steamship lay to in the fog while the officers on the bridge peered anxiously into the fog to try to locate the ship so close at hand.

The whistle signals of the two vessels echoed in the fog. From the re-ounded by a score of lifeboats, caused gasps of relief to the watchers who had strained their eyes through the night.

With marine glasses the spot on the peaceful bosom of the river where the Empress of Ireland had gone down was clearly visible with the lifting of the fog after sunrise. Not even floating wreckage was to be made out on the surface of the water, ruffled by the morning breezes.

The fog lifted shortly after sunrise, and it was that which enabled those ashore to make out the scene with glasses and thus confirm the fears that the worst had happened to the Empress of Ireland.

Wireless Tells Story.

Brief wireless dispatches were sent from the Storstad, which gave thrilling and graphic details of the disaster. From the quickness of the time in which the Empress of Ireland sank some of the passengers were caught in their berths and drowned. Others, in their night clothing, rushed to the rail and flung themselves into the sea without waiting to put on life preservers.

Both men and women were picked up with children clasped in their arms. There was little opportunity for the gave aid wherever possible. Every doctor in the town was on the scene, and many of the injured were taken to private homes.

From cedar chests and closets the townspeople brought garments of all descriptions for those who had lost their belongings. Two headquarters were established—at the wharf and at the station of the Intercolonial railway. At the station those injured and not removed to homes were cared for.

The rescue boats Eureka and Lady Evelyn, found on reaching the point where the Empress sank a scene similar to that which greeted the liners which rushed to the Titanic's aid. They found the ship sunk and the surface of the water, fortunately calm, dotted with lifeboats and smeared with floating debris.

In the lifeboats were huddled the survivors, dazed and mourning, some of them dying of injuries sustained in the rush of leaving the sinking liner. Few could give anything but incoherent, almost hysterical, accounts of what had happened.

J. L. Black and Mrs. Black of Ottawa said they had jumped together into the river. They had been roused by the shock of the collision and, unable to get into a lifeboat, had risked the leap. They were picked up by a boat from the Lady Evelyn.

Of a party of 140 Salvation Army members only twenty were rescued. They had left Quebec, bound for the army's international conference in London. Among the Salvation Army passengers on the liner were the seventy members of the territorial staff band, one of the largest bands of the Salvation Army.

Description of the Ships.

The Empress of Ireland was a sister ship to the Empress of Britain. She was built at the Fairfield Shipbuilding company's works, Glasgow. She was 570 feet long and 63 feet 6 inches beam.

The disaster recalls the accident which happened to a sister ship of the ill-fated vessel, the Empress of Britain, which two years ago rammed and sank the collier Helvelia in almost the same spot in which the Empress of Ireland collision took place.

She was built to accommodate 350 first cabin, 350 second cabin and 1,000 third class passengers. She was 14,500 tons register and about 20,000 tons displacement and was classed as an express steamship. There were five passenger decks, with a boat deck above. The upper deck was famous among travelers, affording a walk of about an eighth of a mile.

She had been plying in the service of her owners between St. John's and Quebec and Liverpool, and especially during the summer months carried large numbers of passengers.

The Storstad, a screw steamer, Captain Anderson, was built in 1910 at Newcastle, England, by Armstrong, Whitworth & Co., for A. F. Klaverness & Co. Her registered home port was Christiania, Norway, and she steamed under the Norwegian flag. She was 440 feet long, 58 feet 1 inch beam and had 24 feet 6 inches depth of hold. The Storstad was a craft of 3,561 tons, with triple expansion engines.

One of the features of the Empress of Ireland was the daily magazine published during the voyage, the news being received by Marconi wireless. Besides her wireless apparatus the Empress of Ireland was equipped with submarine signals to insure safety as far as possible. The big steamship was equipped throughout with electrical devices to add to the comfort of her passengers.

Kendall Captor of Crippen.

Captain Kendall, commander of the lost liner, the Empress of Ireland, gained prominence in world news at almost the very spot where his steamer sank. He is the man who procured the arrest of Dr. Hawley Harvey Crippen, murderer of his wife, Belle Elmore, the actress.

Captain Kendall, who holds the rank of lieutenant in the Royal Naval reserves, was in 1910 commander of the liner Montrose, on which Crippen fled from the continent with Ethel Clare Le Neve, love of whom inspired him to murder his wife.

The commander of the liner recognized the Le Neve girl from photographs in a London paper, which he had on board the ship. He flashed the news by wireless, and Inspector Dew of Scotland Yard met the Montrose at Father Point on the Canadian government ship Eureka—one of the two rescue boats that went to the aid of the Empress of Ireland. The inspector had made the trip across on a faster ship than the Montrose, passing that vessel on the way.

At Father Point everybody was ordered below, and Dew went aboard and placed Crippen under arrest.

Captain Kendall, through the shrewdness and sagacity he displayed in assisting the police to take Crippen, became a hero of two continents. So carefully did he conceal his detective work aboard ship that not a soul besides himself and Llewellyn Jones, the wireless operator, even knew that a person suspected of being Dr. Crippen was among the passengers.

Laurence Sydney Brodrick Irving, one of the passengers on the Empress, was the second son of Sir Henry Irving and widely known in England as an actor, author and manager. He made his first appearance on the stage with F. R. Benson's Shakespearean company in Dundee in 1893.

Mr. Irving played in his father's company from 1900 to 1904 and then for two years toured with his wife, Mabel Lucy Hackney Irving. He was the original Crawshaw in "Raffles."

Mr. Irving wrote many sketches for the stage and translated Sardou's "Robespierre," Maxim Gorki's "The Lower Depths" and other plays.

the telegraph station at Father Point and from other elevated spots along shore. The coast along that part of the St. Lawrence is of volcanic rock formation, and it would have done Captain Kendall no good to try to run his vessel ashore. In fact, it is believed that his engine rooms were so quickly flooded that the vessel was powerless from the moment of the collision.

On account of the hour at which the vessels came together—2:30 o'clock in the morning—only those actually engaged in the navigation and operation of the steamers were awake. The others were in their berths asleep.

The collier ripped open a great hole in the liner, and there was but scant time for the launching and manning of lifeboats. The confusion aboard the vessel was of the wildest as the passengers were shaken out of their slumbers into immediate contact with the gravest peril. A large majority of those who were saved were clad only in their night attire, with clothing in their hands, hastily seized as they fled to the deck.

The first authentic account of the cause of the collision was sent to Captain Walsh, marine superintendent of the Canadian Pacific at Montreal, it was:

"Empress of Ireland stopped by dense fog. Struck amidships in vital spot by collier Storstad."

It was followed a little later by a dispatch from Captain H. G. Kendall of the wrecked ship to Captain Walsh, which contained the two words:

"Ship gone."

The Empress of Ireland was probably the fastest transatlantic liner plying between Canadian ports and Liverpool. She established a record in 1906, three years after her launching, when she made the voyage from Quebec to Liverpool in five days and ten hours.

At the time of her fatal crash with the collier she was bound for Liverpool with her 1,437 souls, a heavy mail and a valuable cargo.

Three hundred and fifty men and women were saved by miraculously rapid work with the lifeboats that had ports at hand it appears that the captain of the Storstad or whoever was in charge at the time had no idea that the other vessel was so close. The Storstad was wallowing along at a good rate of speed when she was sighted from the Empress of Ireland. The clumsy collier was headed for the liner, which presented a broadside target.

Deep laden, her decks almost awash, the Storstad blundered along. Her steel prow tore into the side of the Empress of Ireland. The force of the blow was exerted below the water line. The big liner keeled over and then settled back as the Storstad, after a minute or two, became disengaged and drifted away in the fog.

For only a moment the Empress remained on an even keel. Swiftly she began to sag toward the side that had been torn in the collision. Water was gushing into her hull in torrents, flooding her engine and boiler rooms and compartments. Steadily she keeled over, pulled by the weight of the water below.

The wireless operator sent out a "S O S" call, repeating it frantically. It was heard by the wireless operator at the big station at Father Point, a few miles away.

At the long steamship dock at Father Point were the Canadian government steamer Eureka, used for the transfer of pilots, and the government mail boat Lady Evelyn, tied up for the night. The wireless man at the shore station telegraphed the news that the Empress of Ireland was sinking to the land telegraph station a short distance away, and from the land telegraph station a messenger hurried to the Eureka and the Lady Evelyn.

By the time these vessels were ready to start the wireless operator had learned the position of the sinking Empress.

An Awesome Sight.

Waiting for light, without news and with only the least of hope after the sudden cessation of the steamship's wireless, the coming out of the misty dawn of the two rescue ships, sur-rounders of the ill-fated steamer to put into effect the old rule of the sea—women and children first. The disaster came so quickly and was so overwhelming that it was a case of every person for himself. Captain Kendall was picked up after jumping overboard.

One survivor on the damaged ship gave a brief and graphic description of what had happened. Said he:

"Through the fog we could mistily make out the figure of the ship which had run us down. She was listing badly, and we did not know whether she was going to the bottom or not. This feeling of uncertainty and the likelihood that our neighbor might be sinking with all on board aroused us to a still higher tension of excitement."

"Both men and women dropped to their knees upon the decks. Some prayed aloud. Some buried their faces in their hands and sobbed with a frenzy born of despair and the presence of death."

Survivors Suffered Terribly.

The condition of the survivors was pitiful. Some had broken arms and legs, and all had suffered terribly. L. E. Gossett, a lawyer from Montreal, saved himself by clinging to a raft.

When the rescue ships docked at Rimouski the station platform was converted into a hospital, and the townspeople, bringing food and clothing, united in a common effort to aid the sufferers. Twelve bodies, with faces covered, lay side by side on the wharf. They had made the lifeboats only to be fatally hurt. The vast majority of the saved were members of the ship's crew.

Besides Captain Kendall, the first and second engineers and the ship's surgeon were rescued. The captain was too overcome to give at first any extended account of the disaster. He had sent a wireless to his line after the vessel was struck saying, "Ship gone."

The residents of Rimouski, numbering only 3,000, came silently to the dock where the dead and exhausted living were being landed and, under the direction of the mayor, H. R. Fiset, Booth actually was startled by her appearance when she entered the room a few minutes later. She looked positively ill.

"My dear Sara," he cried anxiously, "this is too bad. You are making yourself ill. Come, come, this won't do."

"I shall be all right in a day or two," she said, with a weary little smile. "I have been nervous. The strain was too great, Brandon. This is the reaction you might say."

"Your hand is hot, your eyes look feverish. You'd better see your doctor as soon as you get to town. An ounce of prevention, you know."

"Well," she said, with a searching look into his eyes, "have you written to her?"

"Yes. Posted it at seven o'clock this morning."

"I trust you did not go so far as to—well, to volunteer a word in my behalf. You were not to do that, you know."

He looked uncomfortable. "I'm afraid I did take your name in vain," he equivocated. "You are a—wonderful woman, Sara," he went on, moved to the remark by a curious influence that he could not have explained any more than he could have accounted for the sudden gush of emotion that took possession of him.

She ignored the tribute. "You will persuade her to come to New York with you?"

"For your sake, Sara, if she won't come for mine."

"She knows the cage is open," was her way of dismissing the subject. "I am glad you came over. I have a letter from Leslie. It came this morning. You may be interested in what he has to say of Hetty—and of yourself."

She smiled faintly. "He is determined that you shall not be without a friend while he is alive."

"Les isn't such a rotter, Sara. He's spoiled, but he is hardly to be blamed for that."

"I will read his letter to you," she said, and there was no little significance in the way she put it. She held the letter in her hand, but he had failed to notice it before. Now he saw that it was a crumpled ball of paper. He was obliged to wait for a minute or two while she restored it to a readable condition. "He was in London when this was written," she explained, turning to the window for light. She glanced swiftly over the first page until she found the place where she meant to begin. "I suppose Hetty Castleton has written that we met in Lucerne two weeks ago," she read.

"Curious coincidence in connection with it, too. I was with her father, Col. Hrad Castleton, when we came upon her most unexpectedly. I ran across him in Paris just before the aviation meet, and got to know him rather well. He's a fine chap, don't you think? I confess I was somewhat surprised to learn that he didn't know she'd left America. He explained it quite naturally, however. He'd been ill in the north of Ireland and must have missed her letters. Hetty was on the point of leaving for Italy. We didn't see much of her. But, by Jove, Sara, I am more completely gone on her than ever. She is adorable. Now that I've met her father, who had the best misfortune to miss old Murgatroyd's funeral, I can readily see where the saying 'blood will tell' applies to her. He is a prince. He came over to London with me the day after we left Hetty in Lucerne, and I had him to meet mother and Vivian at Claridge's. They like him immensely. He was straight on a good many points concerning the Glyn and Castleton families. Of course, I knew they were among the best over here, but I didn't know how fine they were until we prevailed on him to talk a little about himself. You will be glad to hear that he is coming over with us on the Mauretania. She sails the twenty-seventh. We'll be on the water by the time you get this letter. It had been our intention to sail last week, but the colonel had to go to Ireland for a few days to settle some beastly squabbles among the tenants. Next year he wants me to come over for the shooting. He isn't going back to home for two years, you may be interested to hear. Two years' leave. Lots of influence, believe me! We've been expecting him back in London since day before yesterday. I dare say he found matters worse than he suspected and has been delayed. He has been negotiating for the sale of some of his property in Belfast—factory sites, I believe. He is particularly anxious to close the deal before he leaves England. Had to lift a mortgage on the property, before he could think of making the sale. I staked him over four thousand pounds, to tide him over. Of course, he is eager to make the sale. 'Gad, I almost had to beg him to take the money. Terribly proud and haughty, as the butler would say. He said he wouldn't sleep well until he has returned the filthy lucre. We are looking for him back any hour now. But if he shouldn't get here by Friday, we will sail without him. He said he would follow by the next boat, in case anything happened that he didn't catch the Mauretania."

Sara interrupted herself to offer an ironic observation: "If Hetty did not despise her father so heartily, I should advise you to look farther for a father-in-law, Brandon. The colonel is a bad lot. Estates in the north of Ireland! Poor Leslie!" She laughed softly.

"He'll not show up, eh?"

"Not a bit of it," she said. "He may be charged to profit and loss in Leslie's books. This part of the letter will interest you," she went on, as if all that had gone before was of no importance to him. "I hear interesting news concerning you, my dear girl. My heartiest congratulations if it is all true. Brandy is one in a million. I have hoped all along to have him as a full-fledged brother-in-law, if that's the way you'd put it. Father writes that every one is talking about it, and saying what a fine thing it is. He has a feeling of delicacy about approaching you in the matter, and I fancy it's just as well until everything is settled. I wish you'd let me make a suggestion, however. Wouldn't it be wise to let us all get together and talk over the business end of the game? Brandy's a fine chap, a corker, in fact, but the question is: has he got it in him to take Challis' place in the firm? You've got to consider the future as well as the present, my dear. We all do. With his artistic temperament he might play hob with your interests, and ours too, for that matter. Wouldn't it be wise for me to sound him a bit before we take him into the firm? Forgive me for suggesting this, but, as you know, your interests are mine, and I'm terribly keen about seeing you get the best of everything. By the way, wasn't he a bit gone on Hetty? Passing fancy, of course, and not deep enough to hurt anybody. Good old Brandy!"

is settled. I wish you'd let me make a suggestion, however. Wouldn't it be wise to let us all get together and talk over the business end of the game? Passing fancy, of course, and not deep enough to hurt anybody. Good old Brandy!"

"There is more, Brandon, but it's of no consequence," she said, tossing the letter upon the table. "You see how the land lays."

Booth was pale with annoyance. "By Jove, Sara, what an insufferable ass he is!"

"The shoe pinches?"

"Oh, it's such perfect rot! I'm sorry on your account. Have you ever heard of such gall?"

"Oh, he is merely acting as the family spokesman. I can see them now in solemn conclave. They think it their indisputable right to select a husband for me, to pass upon him, to accept or decline him as they see fit, to say whether he is a proper man to hang up his hat and coat in the offices of Wrاندall & Co."

"Do you mean to say—"

"Let's not talk about it, Brandon. It is too silly."

They fell to discussing her plans for the immediate future, although the minds of both were at work with something else.

"Now that I have served my purpose, I suppose you will not care to see so much of me," she said, as he prepared to take leave of her.

"Served your purpose? What do you mean?"

"I should have put it differently. You have been most assiduous in your efforts to force the secret from me. It has been accomplished. Now do you understand?"

"That isn't fair, Sara," he protested. "If you'll let me come to see you, in spite of what the gossips and Mr. Redmond Wrاندall predict, you may be sure I will be as much in evidence as ever. I suppose I have been a bit of a nuisance, hanging on as I have."

"I admire your perseverance. More than that, I admire your courage in accepting the situation as you have. I only hope you may win her over to your way of thinking, Brandon. Goodby."

"I shall go up to town tomorrow, kit and bag. When shall I see you? We have a great deal left to talk about before I sail."

"Come when you like."

"You really want me to come?"

"Certainly."

He studied her pale, tired face for a moment, and then shook his head. "You must take care of yourself," he said. "You are unstrung. Get a good rest and—forget certain things if you can. Everything will come out all right in the end."

"It depends on what one is willing to accept as the end," he said.

CHAPTER XIX.

The Hollow of Her Hand.

When Booth called in the afternoon at Sara's apartment, he was met by the news that she was quite ill and could see no one—not even him. The doctor had been summoned during the night and had returned in the morning, to find that she had a very high temperature. The butler could not enlighten Booth further than this, except to add that a nurse was coming in to take charge of Mrs. Wrاندall, more for the purpose of watching her symptoms than for anything else, he believed. At least, so the doctor had said.

Two days passed before the distressed young man could get any definite news concerning her condition. He unconsciously began to think of it as a malady, not a mere illness, due of course to a remark Carroll had dropped when Sara had told him the whole truth of the tragedy and of her own vindictive plans. It was Carroll himself who gave a definite report of Sara. He met the lawyer coming away from the apartment when he called to inquire.

"She isn't out of her head, or anything like that," said Carroll uneasily, "but she's in a bad way, Booth. I'll tell you what I think is troubling her more than anything else. Down in her heart she realizes that Hetty Castleton has got to be brought face to face with the Wrاندalls."

"The deuce you say!"

"Today I saw her for the first time. Almost immediately she asked me if I thought the Wrاندalls would treat Hetty fairly if they ever found out the truth about her. I said I thought they would. I didn't have the heart to tell her that their grievance undoubtedly would be shifted from Hetty to her, and that they wouldn't be likely to forgive her for the stand she'd taken. She doesn't seem to care, however, what the Wrاندalls think of her. By the way, have you any influence over Hetty Castleton?"

"I wish I were sure that I had," said Booth.

"Do you think she would come if you sent her a cablegram?"

"I am going over—"

"She will have your letter in a couple of days, according to Sara, who seems to have a very faithful correspondent in the person of that maid. I shudder to think of the cable tolls in the past few months! I sometimes wonder if the maid suspects anything more than a loving interest in Miss Castleton. What I was about to suggest is this: Couldn't you cable her on Friday saying that Sara is very ill? This is Tuesday."

"I will cable, of course, but Sara must not know that I've done it."

"Can you come to my office tomorrow afternoon?"

"Yes. Tomorrow night I shall go over to Philadelphia, to be gone till Friday. I hope it will not be necessary for me to stay longer. You never can tell about these operations."

"I trust everything will go well, Brandon."

Several things of note transpired before noon on Friday.

The Wrاندalls arrived from Europe, without the recalcitrant colonel. Mr. Redmond Wrاندall, who met them at the dock, heaved a sigh of relief.

"He will be over on the Lusitania, next sailing," said Leslie, who for some reason best known to himself wore a troubled look.

Mr. Wrاندall's face fell. "I hope not," he said, much to the indignation of his wife and the secret uneasiness of his son. "These predatory connections of the British nobility—"

"Predatory!" gasped Mrs. Wrاندall. "—are a blood-sucking lot," went on the old gentleman firmly. "If he comes to New York, Leslie, I'll stake my head he won't be long in borrowing a few thousand dollars from each of us. And he'll not seek to humiliate us by attempting to pay it back. Oh, I know them."

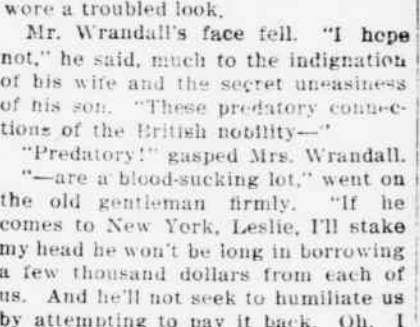

Leslie swallowed rather hard. "What's the news here, dad?" he asked hastily. "Anybody dead?"

"Sara is quite ill, I hear. Slow fever of some sort, Carroll tells me."

"Is she going to marry Brandy Booth?" asked his son.

Mr. Wrاندall's face stiffened. "I fear I was a little hasty in my conclusions. Brandon came to the office a few days ago and informed me in rather plain words that there is absolutely nothing in the report."

"The deuce you say! 'Gad, I wrote her a rather intimate letter—" Leslie got no farther than this. He was somewhat stunned and bewildered by his private reflections.

Mr. Wrاندall was lost in study for some minutes, paying no attention to the remarks of the other occupants of the motor that whirled them across town.

"By the way, my dear," he said to his wife, a trifle irrelevantly, "don't you think it would be right for you and Vivian to drop in this afternoon and see Sara? Just to let her know that she isn't without—"

No criminal cases of importance or public interest have been tried.

In the case of Robert Hayes, of Wilkes county, convicted of conspiracy, judgment was suspended for this term.

Jesse Sheetz, of Wilkes county, indicted for illicit distilling and who had been in jail for over seven months, was given his liberty by the court.

Judgment was suspended in a case charging Hard Martin, of Stokes county, with illicit distilling, in view of the fact that the defendant had been punished by the state court.

Sam Moore, Henry Moore and Dink Mace, all of Alleghany county, were convicted of illicit distilling. Judgment has not been pronounced.

Claude and Gray Bowlin, of Yadkin county, were found guilty of illicit distilling. Judgment was reserved for later in the term.

Jim Ferrall, colored, of Guilford county, was acquitted of the charge of peddling tobacco without a license.

Charles Harrison, of Rockingham county, was found guilty of operating an illicit distillery. Judgment will be pronounced later.

CONCERNING PROPOSED SCHOOL BOND ISSUE.

We, the undersigned citizens of Pentrist township, believing that the proposed bond issue for school improvements, has been generally misunderstood, have examined carefully the conditions under which said bonds were to be issued and find the following to be true:

First, that the school fund derived from the present local tax and also rent from the proposed dormitories is sufficient to pay interest on said bonds and also create a sinking fund which will meet the bonds at maturity.

Second, that while the law gives the county commissioners the right to levy a tax sufficient to take care of the said bonds, this is intended only for those school districts which have no special tax, and whose school fund is not sufficient to pay interest on bonds and also create a sinking fund to meet them at maturity.

If, after the people had voted to issue these bonds, they should then vote off the local tax, and the law entitles them to do this, then the county commissioners would be forced to levy a tax of about five cents on the hundred to take care of these bonds.

It was never intended, when the bond issue was proposed, to increase the tax, and it would not have been advocated had not the school fund been sufficient to take care of these bonds. The city of Greensboro every few years issues bonds for street improvement and also for schools, but the tax rate is not raised.

JUNE MEETING OF THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

Very little business of public interest was transacted at the June meeting of the board of county commissioners, which was held Monday and Tuesday. All the members of the board were present except Mr. W. C. Jones, of High Point.

The annual apportionment of the township road money was made, the sum of $500 being appropriated to each of the townships except Rock Creek, which was given $600, and Morehead, Gilmer and High Point, which were allowed $900 each. This money is expended under the direction of the township road commissioners.

The board received the monthly report of Dr. W. M. Jones, the county health officer, which showed a great decrease in the number of contagious diseases. Eight cases of smallpox were reported for the month of May, all of them being confined to the Pomona mill village. Not a single case of typhoid fever, mumps or measles was reported during the month. The work of the county health department is progressing very satisfactorily.

The commissioners exempted the High Point hospital from the payment of taxes and appropriated $100 each to the military companies in Greensboro and High Point.

K. T. Springs and Sidney A. Moser were exempted from the payment of poll taxes on account of physical infirmity.

BROODED OVER A JOKE AND LOST HER MIND.

High Point, June 1.—"I do not know where I have been, but I do know where I started," remarked Mrs. Frank Stout, of Tomlinson street, a few mornings ago when she put in an appearance after being vainly looked for all night by her friends and relatives. The report became general that she had become suddenly possessed of melancholia, and when she returned she looked into the face of a girl friend, and staring vacantly, said: "Now, see what you have done!" The remark possessed a potent pathos, a terrible tragedy, inasmuch as the girl friend had some time previously jokingly teased Mrs. Stout that her husband, who is known as faithful and loving, was going to see another woman. Brooding over a fear of this faithlessness she has been seized by extreme hypochondria.

An especially sad feature of the case is the children, of whom there are three, the youngest being only an eight-months-old baby. The father, who is a hardworking, law-abiding citizen, works at the Snow Lumber Company's plant.

The hope of the social service department of the Woman's Club eventually to place her in care of the state asylum at Morganton will doubtless be long in realization, as that institution has some two hundred applications for whom they have no room. The Junior Order, the Elks, and other local fraternities are seeing that all possible is done to relieve the sadness.

FORCES PREPARING FOR FIGHT ON THE PRESIDENT.

The Washington correspondent of the Charlotte Observer writes his paper that the forces are assembling for a stiff fight against the Democrats. Every excuse is seized to club the president. The Grand Army of the Republic was dragged into the arena last week by a crank of a veteran who has fought more since the war than he did during the war. The occasion was the celebration of Memorial day. President Wilson was charged with favoring the Confederates by accepting an invitation to attend the unveiling of their monument at Arlington this week, and refusing to address the Union veterans on Memorial day.

Most of the talk about the president's refusal to promise to go to Arlington until the last moment was pure tommyrot. The Republicans are behind that sort of stuff; it is water on their wheel.

But there is every indication to make one believe that President Wilson is very popular back in the country. The people like him for his frankness, his ability, and his frankness. His Mexican policy is approved by the masses, who do not want to see this country go to war with Mexico except as a last resort. The tolls repeal question has arrayed some forces against the president, while it has brought others to him. The real issue—the one that the next campaign will be waged over—is the ancient one of the tariff. Roosevelt's calamity howl at New York shows the way the wind is blowing. The colonel is in full cry with Gilliam Grissom, secretary, and John M. Morehead, chairman of the North Carolina Republican committee. The Democratic tariff, they say, has not reduced the cost of living and it has hurt business and driven from our midst prosperity. That is to be the slogan of a united Republican party. The union may not come tomorrow or the next day but it is coming, and the tariff will be the paramount issue. Every sign points that way now.

Senator Simmons and other leading Democrats here think that the Underwood-Simmons tariff law is the proper one. They and President Wilson will defend it in the congressional campaigns this fall. Roosevelt will abuse it.
