Preregistration Starts Monday

Preregistration for the fall semester will begin on Monday, May 3 and continue through Friday, May 7.

After completely filled out, including approval by the student's faculty advisor, the cards should be turned into the registrar's Office.

Enrollment deposits must be paid before preregistration. Students will be asked to show their receipts before they are allowed to turn in their computer cards.

In filling out schedule request cards, students should print legibly. All courses should be listed according to their departmental abbreviation and number, not their course titles. Sections must be listed if there are more than one offered.

NEW OFFICERS INSTALLED TUES.

The student body will have its first chance to hear Miss Robie McFarland officially speak on Tuesday, May 1 at 6:30 p.m. during the convocation for installation of new officers in Cone Ballroom.

For the mass meeting traditionally held the first Tuesday in May will last approximately half an hour.

Lindsay Lamson, retiring SGA President, is "requiring the freshman and sophomore classes to attend and requesting the juniors and seniors to attend." The convocation is an open meeting and the administration and faculty are welcome.

Mr Lamson informed the CAROLINIAN the convocation will begin with the introduction of the new officers to the audience.

Prior to the swearing in ceremonies, Mr. Lamson will make brief summary assessing the present administrations policies.

Mr. Lamson stated he will also briefly discuss "Some very disturbing things in the short run future which it looks like the students may come out on the short end of the deal" if they do not actively participate, such as academic reform and student services.

Continuing, Mr. Lamson voiced, "unless the students exert pressures upon the university to change those things that bother them, then they have no right to expect the university administration to do it for them."

However said Lamson, "once students have indicated to the administration what changes they would like to see instigated it is the responsibility of the administration to promptly discuss those charges and put them into effect in a form that is agreeable to all members of the university committee."

McFarland will be sworn into what Lamson calls "undoubtedly the pressure cooker of college life." In this first official statement, she is expected to indicate to those present the directions of the new administration.

Other officers, to be installed after McFarland are SGA vice president, attorney general, chairmen of the campus organizations and court WEHL manager, NSA Coordinator and the Town Students President.

RUNOFF

The second SGA runoff will be Monday. The polls will be open from 12-6 pm. An eighth freshman dorm coordinator will be elected and dorm coordinators in Ragsdale and I-House.

DAILY TAR HEEL

State Senator Wants Funds Cut Off

by Ned Cline
Greensboro Daily News
Raleigh Bureau
Reprinted by permission

The weighty problems of state government hang just as heavily over the heads of legislators' heads today as they did when the lawmakers came to town more than three months ago.

But it is a recent issue of the Daily Tar Heel, the UNC[Chapel-Hill] student newspaper, which has more than just a few General Assembly members up in arms.

The immediate result of all the concern will be the introduction of a bill today which would eliminate the required UNC student fees for the newspaper.

The Daily Tar Heel straw which broke the legislators' backs was publication of a picture in the April 23 issue of two apparent homosexuals engaged in an embrace. The picture showed two bare chested men holding hands with their stomachs touching one with his hand on the other's buttocks.

There was also a news story which discussed activities at a 'gay bar' in Chapel Hill.

That picture and story were too much for Sen. Julian Allsbrook, D-Halifax, a UNC alumnus. Allsbrook in the past two days has carried that picture and story with him around the legislative halls, showing it to member and others at each opportunity.

Legislators jumped on Allsbrook's condemnation bandwagon from all directions.

Subsequently, the Halifax senator has drafted a bill which would prohibit the university from requiring students to pay for a subscription to the publication through their regular student fees.

"I've been considering this kind of legislation for two years," Allsbrook said Wednesday, "because here have been other things in the newspaper. But none were so flagrant as this picture and story."

Late Wednesday, Allsbrook still was undecided if his bill would prohibit the payment of fees for the campus newspaper or leave the fees optional for students.

Rep. Julian Fenner, D-Nash, also has planned legislation aimed at the Daily Tar Heel. So he and Allsbrook plan to pool their two proposals before introduction today.

Allsbrook said that after showing the homosexual picture and story to lawmakers, he had received generous support for his planned legislation.

He was quick to point out that homosexual activity in North Carolina is a felony, punishable by imprisonment of from six to 60 years. That penalty is higher than the penalty for second degree murder in this state which carries a maximum prison term of 30 years.

The implication from Allsbrook is that UNC is promoting felonious acts by publishing stories and pictures participants.

Undergraduate students at UNC pay an $18 per year student activity fee which goes for subscriptions to the Daily Tar Heel and other student publications.

The Allsbrook bill today will represent the first time the General Assembly has attempted to interfere with the student publication or its subscription system.

Some legislators who have indicated that while they would support a curb on mandatory fees said they did

editorial

It's wonderful that our State Legislators are concerned about college campus affairs, but...

When the Daily Tar Heel, (student newspaper at UNC-Chapel Hill) chose homosexuality as the topic for a feature article, Senator Julian Allsbrook, a UNC alumnus, decided that it was time for the state to step in and take action to halt the student press. (See page 1 for complete story.) It is his opinion that students should not be required to pay for such a newspaper with their activity fees or that perhaps the Daily Tar Heel should be completely without funds. One senator was quoted as saying that "I'm for freedom of the press, but things have just about gone too far with this kind of stuff."

The Daily Tar Heel, an award winning collegiate paper, heard no repercussions from the readers for whom the paper is published (ie, UNC-CH students). As a college publication, the Tar Heel is geared toward a fairly liberal, more highly intellectual reading level than is a regular city newspaper, which is written for a sixth grade readership. Not to be trite, but the college newspaper is written of the students, with no particular intentions to appeal to the masses.

The issue here is not merely the expected cry, "Freedom of the Press!" but also freedom of the student voice. If a bill is passed to eliminate funds for publication of the Tar Heel, members of its staff will cry "Discrimination," questioning the legality of such action, where 5 other branches of UNC are involved. One begins to wonder if State Legislature's grasp exceeds its reach when it begins to decide University policy. If Legislature possess the power, and take the action to quiet the student voice of UNC, it becomes questionable as to where they will stop trying to keep students from "going too far."

"No government ought to be without censors; and where the press is free, no one ever will." Thomas Jefferson.

THE CAROLINIAN THE CAROLINIAN THE CAROLIN

Letters To The Editor

To the Editor:

During the year you say you have been actively seeking out news in all the corners and crevices of campus as evidenced by your public pleas for news published in numerous issues of the CAROLINIAN. This I would consider a worthy effort, if it were carried out to the fullest extent. You have also printed that often the CAROLINIAN is the last to know. Whose fault is that, yours or the news sources?

On several occasions I have turned in to the CAROLINIAN bits of information concerning SCORE, specifically, pertaining to Course and Teacher Evaluation, which concerns both the faculty and the students. I can recall at least three specific pieces of information that were turned in to you with the highest hopes that they would be published but, if my memory serves me correctly, I can only recall one item in print. What is done with the items that heads or staff of organizations turn in to you for publication?

I repeat, who is at fault that you are sometimes the last to know or print, the CAROLINIAN or the news sources?

Sincerely,
Madeline Bombeld

To the Editor:

I would like to reply to the April 23 letter from Whitmel M. Joyner concerning the "Library Suggestion Forms."

In that letter Mr. Joyner charges that "thousands" of forms were printed at the students' expense. The truth is that only 200 of these forms were printed. Yes, they were printed at the students' expense, at a total cost of $33 for materials plus approximately $1.00 for labor in typing and printing.

Mr. Joyner also charges that the forms have gone "untouched." If Mr. Joyner is so observant he has probably noticed that there is no suggestion box in the Library. Reason? The suggestions are to be reviewed by Dr. Thompson, the director of the Library, daily. There will be a meeting between Dr. Thompson and Miss Wanda Porter, SGA Undersecretary for the Library, to discuss implementation of the suggestions.

Funny thing how Mr. Joyner did not seem to notice the extension of Library closing hours to midnight and the new opening hour of 1:00 p.m. on Sundays. These extensions were the result of many hours of investigation, letter writing, and meetings donated by those people referred to as "do goodys."

Lastly, I don't know whether I agree with Mr. Joyner's final comment. At any rate it should not be a question of "whether" but of "whose."

Rubin F. Maness
SGA Secretary for Student Services

Editor's Note:

The line to which Mr. Maness refers is as follows, "We really do live in a world of shit, don't we."

To the Editor:

Four dollars to fix my car's points today and last week $25 for the brakes. And why this expense? It is due to female ignorance of auto mechanic principles.

I can't begin to estimate the amount of money girls at UNC-G spend each year for labor (on cars that is). I suggest that the female students here arise and demand that the University offer a 3 credit course in auto mechanics.

I propose a lab in which the art of tire changing, oil changing, replacement of points, plugs and fan belts could be mastered. Lectures could explore the world of wheel alignment, mufflers, chasis, flooding, carburetors, generators, ball bearings, alternators and many other accelerating topics. Class discussions might include the pros and cons of seat belts, when to take advantage of syncromesh and how to charm a policeman out of a ticket.

If enough excitement was raised perhaps this proposed auto mechanic course could take the place of certain requirements, Biology for example. I believe this course could prove to be a real gas.

Nixon Says Not Intimidated

(Washington, UPI)—President Nixon told the nation tonight he won't be intimidated by anti-war protesters. He says he'll prosecute those who break the law. In a wide ranging news conference broadcast live, the President spoke for the first time about the demonstrations now going on in Washington. The protests have generally been peaceful but about 700 persons have been arrested, including about 200 who late this afternoon attempted to march on the White House.

Mr. Nixon assured his listeners that the voices of dissent are being heard. He joked "You couldn't help" but hear the chanting. He said the television accounts of the demonstrations had led to an impression that Washington is under a state of seige. Not so, he said.

The President said he would not be moved, as many demonstrators demand, to make a "precipitous" pullout from Vietnam. He said he'll continue his plan of phased withdrawals.

On other subjects, Mr. Nixon again appealed for an exchange of war prisoners. He said that under no circumstances will the US pullout of Vietnam until American prisoners are released.

The President also said that he hopes to visit Communist China. But he added that he hadn't been invited, and was referring "only to a hope, an expectation" that he would see the mainland "at some time in my life, in some capacity."

Calley, hero or murderer?

by Nanker Phelge
(a Viet Nam veteran)

The elevation of an admitted mass murderer to the status of a national hero is a phenomenon which by all accounts defies logical explanation. The facts about My Lai have nearly been lost in all the flag waving, breast beating and speech making. What would these same defenders of Lt. William Calley do if the situation was turned around?

It is, let us assume, March 1968 and a Viet Cong Company overruns a U.S. outpost and captures 100 or more G.I's. They are forced to march to what they believe will be a prisoner of war camp. But their captors were told not to take any prisoners alive. The captors are also bitter about having lost friends and relatives to American bombs and soldiers. They believe the only way to end all of this is to kill the American POW's and a young VC officer orders his men to shove the Americans into a ditch and kill them.

How would the defenders of Lt. Calley react to such an outrageous act as this? Would Richard Nixon ask that the Viet Cong release such a man, if he was tried and found guilty from his prison cell? Would these other Americans ask that he be freed? It is doubtful that either of these would happen.

The fact is Lt. William Calley was found guilty of murder only because of the overwhelming evidence presented against him. He was not found guilty because "he was only doing his duty." Calley was acting in flagrant violation of what every American soldier is taught from the time he enters the military.

It is against every American and international law, as well as the Geneva Convention of 1949, to kill civilians in such a manner. These victims were not the enemy. The Administrations have said officially that the U.S. is in Vietnam to protect the South Vietnamese from the North Vietnamese and Lt. Calley's actions were in direct violation of this doctrine.

Prosecutor Captain Aubrey Daniels summed it up when he said, "What he (Calley) did stripped him of his honor. It is not honor and never can be honor to kill men, women and children." And that's the Point.

Lamson And Rayle Attend Conference

The University of North Carolina at Greensboro was represented by two delegates, Lindsay Lamson and Sharon Rayle, at the 1971 Naval Academy Foreign Affairs Conference. Each spring the Naval Academy sponsors a Foreign Affairs Conference to discuss major world problems, current United States policy, and possible modifications of American Foreign Policy. This year's Conference concentrated on the "Strategic Balance of Power."

Delegates attended the conference from all over the United States, including Alaska. In addition to these student delegates from over 150 colleges and universities, foreign diplomats and spokesmen for the Nixon Administration also participated in the discussions. The UNC-G delegates participated in "round table" discussions on "The Pacific Area" and "Latin America."

Delegates to this year's conference were selected by a committee chaired by Mr. Eugene Sarver of the Political Science Department. Students interested in applying for next spring's conference at the Naval Academy or next fall's conference at West Point should look for further information in the CAROLINIAN, or contact the Political Science Department early next fall.

Chadwick Wins Fulbright Scholarship

A Durham senior at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro has been awarded a Fulbright Scholarship for a year of graduate study in Austria.

The scholarship has been awarded to Miss Emily M. Chadwick, who is majoring in the German language at UNC-G.

Miss Chadwick is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Chadwick of 2613 Dominion St. in Durham. She is a graduate of Durham High School.

As a Fulbright Scholar, Miss Chadwick will enter the University of Vienna in Vienna, Austria next October. There she will study Austrian literature and other related subjects. Her scholarship will provide in excess of $1,300 for tuition, books and living expenses, plus additional money for travel to and from Austria.

Miss Chadwick has already studied abroad previously. She spent her junior year at the University of Heidelberg in Germany, and then came back to UNC-G to finish her undergraduate work this year.

She recently was elected to membership in UNC-G's chapter of Phi Beta Kappa on the basis of her academic record. Last semester, she made all "A's" on her subjects at UNC-G, and overall has a grade point ratio of approximately 3.6 out of a possible 4.0 for her undergraduate career.

Dr. Anne Baecker, head of the Department of German and Russian at UNC-G, pointed out that Miss Chadwick was selected for the Fulbright Scholarship on the basis of her academic achievements.

Dr. Baecker added that a total of 13 UNC-G students have won the coveted Fulbright Scholarships during the past six years.

Since 1963, six German majors have captured Fulbright Scholarships, she noted.

Miss Chadwick previously won a National Merit Scholarship. At UNC-G, she lives in International House and is the student in charge of the German wing of the residence hall.

Students hunt For nature areas

Students at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro are participating in a state wide field-study project to pinpoint natural areas in North Carolina that should be preserved and protected.

The natural areas survey project is being sponsored by the North Carolina Department of Conservation and Development's parks division. C&D Director Roy Sowers, issued a release announcing the program.

University of North Carolina students involved in the program are working under the direction of Dr. Hollis Rogers in the department of Biology.

The students are visiting sites near UNC seeking to list and describe those areas which possess qualities of significant scientific and educational values worthy of being preserved.

The student groups will file a written report at the end of the current semester with the parks division. A complete summary of the areas judged most suitable for preservation will be published by the C&D agency, according to Sowers.

Sowers, who initiated the project, said the students involved will receive academic credit for their work.

"This is a great program and it's the kind of thing State Government agencies should do more of," he said.

"There are many needs in North Carolina and we in Government should be more than willing to take advantage of our students' interest and concerns," Sowers added.

The project is being coordinated by Robert Teulings, who is associated with the Conservation Council of North Carolina, and a member of the parks division staff.

The extent of student involvement varies with each institution, according to Teulings. In some instances, two or three students are engaged in the natural areas survey, and at other schools, entire classes are conducting the study.

Students working on the project are located at: Appalachian State University, East Carolina, Guilford College, Methodist College, Wake Forest, Western Carolina and UNC at Chapel Hill, Charlotte, Greensboro, Wilmington and Raleigh.

Community Correlates Heritage With Insights

The Covenant Community is a nine month residential community of six students with a minister and his wife seeking creatively to correlate their Christian heritage with insights and questions of students in the University. A major concern is to provide a living and learning context for undergraduate education, helping to translate learning into meaningful and effective living.

The community assumes that growth in maturity and effective education occur in an accepting, trusting, and responsibility taking community of learners who draw upon the worship and theological resources of the Christian Faith.

The program structure for the Community may include study and discussion, common worship, community service, a common meal, and participation in one of the Campus Christian Fellowship groups.

Through life in the University and Covenant Community, the student deals in a balanced and comprehensive approach with fundamental questions confronting all students: Who am I? What meaning and purpose may life have for me? How may I live creatively and joyously?

The community has University approval.

In spite of some additional time commitments in the life of the Community, students usually see rises in academic averages and note significant intellectual achievement. In part, this reflects the nurturing of effective study habits.

A basic purpose of the Community is to assist the student in maximizing social, cultural and educational opportunities in the University. Students participate fully in the social and cultural life on the campus.

The community costs the same as other UNC-G students plus $50 per semester toward the program of the Community. Scholarships and loans through the University may apply to the Community. Special scholarships may be worked out with the help of the Campus Ministers Association.

The Covenant Community is located across from the Administration Building and "up the street" from the New Classroom Building at 526 Highland Ave.

Any UNC-G student may apply.

The primary concern in selecting participants is the student's concern for the purpose and life of the community, a willingness to grow in interpersonal relationships and self understanding, openness to free and honest inquiry, and a desire to be a student.

Application forms are available from any campus minister or at any one of the Campus Christian Fellowships.

Students should apply soon. Now is best! Selection of applicants will take place before the end of the semester this year.

If students have already made a university room deposit, it can be applied to the tuition expenses.

POLLUTION CAUSES DISCOLORATION

Have you ever wondered why your draperies or other white textile fabrics turn yellow?

Blame it on air pollutants in the atmosphere, advises a professor at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

"The causes of yellow discoloration on whites is clearly due to air contaminants since changes take place only in portions exposed to ambient air currents," explained Dr. Victor Salvin, a textile professor in UNC-G's School of Home Economics.

He pointed out that the presence of light is a contributory factor, but noted that changes in color also take place in storage areas protected from light.

Dr. Salvin recently was awarded a $19,434 grant from the federal Air Pollution Control Office in Washington to make a thorough study of the effects of air pollutants on white textile fabrics.

Last June, Prof. Salvin concluded a nationwide, two year study documenting the effects of air pollution on various kinds of textile materials. He found that air pollutants not only pose a potential health hazard, but in addition, are costing U.S. consumers approximately $1.5 billion annually in damage to various kinds of textile materials alone. That study was funded by the federal government also.

"One of the things I found out in that research which has not been generally known is that white fabrics tend to go yellow when exposed to air pollution," he explained. "This is in addition to the dirtying effect of air pollutants."

Prof. Salvin estimated that air pollutants' yellowing effects on white fabrics is costing the textile industry and the consumer in the U.S. approximately $21 million per year.

Despite the fact that undyed fabrics represent 10 per cent of the $70 billion production of textile products in the U.S., the effects of air pollutants on discoloration of whites have not been given an effective examination, noted Dr. Salvin.

"Although the textile industry is aware of the problem shown by the large percentage of fiber producers and mills which reported cases of pollutant damage on whites, there is very little published information as to the materials which yellow and the causative agents," noted Dr. Salvin. No sound technical study has been made in this specific field, he added.

The professor cited two examples of yellowing due to air pollution: the yellowing of whites in permanent press fabrics and the yellowing of anti static finishes. The causative agent has not been clearly established, he explained.

"As in the case of dyes, the action of light can give color changes and light is blamed for the complaint effect. The effective air pollutants which also would cause yellowing have been neglected."

Salvin pointed out also that draperies, lingerie and apparel are end products whose pronounced yellow discoloration has led to withdrawal of products from the market as well as returned merchandise.

The $19,434 grant will finance Dr. Salvin's research project for one year, through next spring. In the study, he will have three objectives:

*To demonstrate that specific air pollutants are a causative agent of objectionable yellowing.

*To develop test methods that will show dosage response relationships between pollutant concentration and yellowing of white and light fabrics.

*To define those fibers, fiber additives and finishes which are vulnerable to chemical action in air pollutants.

"This information is not available to the industry or the consumer," Salvin explained.
